Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, on May 1, 1939, an article written by me was published in the RECORD, and immediately after this publication undue interest was taken in my activities in the House. The article set forth certain data which, I believe, is authentic, and its publication was to give certain facts that might stop deliberate attempts to shape public opinion for war.

Shortly after May 1 a silent campaign began in Washington and at home in which the informants have whispered defamation of me in the following manner: "I understand he is connected with Nazi organizations and he is a protégé of Father Coughlin. Have you heard about it?" And so forth. Of course, no one had heard about it, and I was not aware of it until informed by an employee in the House and by letters I received from interested friends.

It seems strange, indeed, that anyone who rises in opposition to the New Deal and in defense of the Republic is labeled a "Nazi" by the Socialists and Communists, but not by anyone else.

The injustice of this propaganda and its possible destruction of character is a matter to which these assassins give little thought. Such infamous attacks cannot be stopped after they are once started, but must, instead, like forest fires, burn themselves out.

However, selecting me as a victim for this character destruction is a wasted effort, for that has been tried before by others, and they have failed. Ever since my advent in politics my character has been assailed by self-admitted Communists, who also claim to be staunch supporters of the New Deal and the President, but, contrary to the recent episode, they have expressed themselves in the open.

As a Member of the House of Representatives, I have at times discussed Congress, the Executive, and the Supreme Court, and in such discussions, I believe, confined myself to just criticisms. During this same period I have not neglected to criticize the Socialists and socialism in its various phases and activities, yet, outside of a few quips by certain writers, my activities have gone unnoticed.

In this article I discussed the invisible government. This government is now composed of the money power—I want to be charitable—and a group with socialistic philosophy. Both of these groups are largely composed of European casualties, which are now being dumped in our lap.

The United States is selected as an exhibition ground for the golden calf and its wailing devotees. The power which rules is money, for it buys and controls newspapers, cinema, and broadcasting. This power is working in close cooperation with its associates in the administration.

To assure success in this rape on the Republic, Members in Congress are induced to introduce legislation which restricts and censors broadcasting to all, except the dupes of the invisible government. We, the suckers, who must pay the bill, are treated with specially prepared fireside chats ad nauseum.

The security of this group in the invisible government is a little uncertain, for we are not far removed from the days of the vigilantes, and there are many hard-headed Americans who still believe in constitutional government, and might for that reason take the law into their own hands, as they have done before.

To soothe the masses and to amuse them, business is held up to ridicule and declared incompetent to handle its own affairs. It is no different than the dim past, when the populace in the coliseum viewed unequal combat in the arena. The people then applauded the lion; they now applaud the jackass.

Business is now held up to ridicule and in contempt, even by Members of Congress, which is evidenced by opinions like this, expressed in one of our daily papers:

BUSINESS SIT-DOWN CHARGED

This Congress exhibits no concern over the mounting costs of the Federal Government and the widening gulf between revenues and appropriations. Before Congress adjourns, $10,000,000,000 will have been appropriated. The deficit next year will be at least $4,000,000,000.

Senator X (Democrat), X State, a leading New Deal supporter, took a different view of the fiscal situation.

"I don't see," he said, "how we can make real economies until the business situation picks up, and big business now is quite definitely on a sit-down strike. As long as they take that attitude, the Government has no alternative except taxing and spending. We will have to increase taxes somewhat."

I refrain from using names, but the gentleman forgets that it is business which is paying his salary and the salary of every employee in the Government. It is business that pays for a stupid, cumbersome legal structure, unjust as it is useless. It is business that is paying the total cost of the Nation and for the asinine stupidity of Congress. It is business and the people engaged therein who sent the gentleman to Congress, and they are the people whose rights the gentleman swore "to preserve, to protect, and defend." This is an oath that makes those who subscribe to it traitors when they cast aside their obligation.

Why should business, after having been kicked about and beaten into submission for 8 years, stand up only to be bowled over again? I say, why in common sense should business get up unless it is to kill those who have assailed it? There will be a day of reckoning, a day of liquidation, and the people should mark those who have been instrumental in sending our Nation and our people on the road to poverty and destruction. Let me say at this point that responsibility for this calamity cannot in any sense be blamed upon the Nation's business and industry.

It is my desire to express appreciation to those who have sent me books, information, and clippings, and here is one of them from a daily issue, May 11, 1939:

JESSE JONES UPHOLDS GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS

Declaring "the time is not at hand yet when Government can withdraw from the business picture," Chairman Jesse Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, yesterday told the National Retail Lumber Dealers' Association he favored Federal intervention until such a time as private enterprise demonstrated "it could do without it."

I have heard compliments expressed on Mr. Jones' ability, but, if this is a sample of it, I withhold mine.

Federal usurpation of business is destructive and directly responsible for our present unemployment situation. Federal intervention in business is of no value unless there is special ability among those who intervene, and there has been no evidence of that to date. Our Nation's industry and business are operated upon private capital investment. Having their own capital at stake, it is only reasonable to assume that care will be used in its protection. The Federal Government can render the greatest aid by keeping its nose out of business which is still solvent because the Government must depend upon such earnings to pay its expenses. It is, therefore, not for business to prove that it can do without the Government; it is instead for the Government to understand its proper place in relation to business.

RELEASE IDLE BANK HOARD, HOPKINS URGES

Secretary, outlining recovery plans, says spending must go on.

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins, holding his first press conference yesterday in several weeks, outlined the following administration program for business recovery:

Continuation of the spending policy, as outlined by President Roosevelt in his annual and Budget messages to Congress last January, for at least another 12 months.

Stimulation of the use of the unprecedently huge hoard of idle bank funds in every way possible.

I sometimes wonder whether the administration is a circus because of its insatiate desire for publicity. The question may be asked, Why should any Federal department employ a publicity bureau?

Why make the present publicity, which is now a pain in the neck to most of us, an excruciating national headache? We do not need to be informed that it requires no ability to spend money, and that is all Mr. Hopkins has done since he has been in office, and for him to say, "We should not get emotional about economic problems," is, if nothing else, silly. Mr. Hopkins should know that our people are not of an emotional nature. We are only tightening our belts and girding ourselves for the fray to come, when we may commit our egotistical experts, who are suffering from delusions of grandeur, to a sanitarium where they may spend their remaining years writing checks for billions of dollars.

There is, however, a simple law which it would be well for many departmental heads to recognize, and that is: Money will only remain in circulation in localities where it is used in industries. When employed in such manner, it furnishes work and a pay roll for the people employed. Prosperity will be enjoyed in such localities as long as such industry or business operates. When it is forced to close, no matter why, unemployment and poverty prevail. For this reason Federal spending cannot and never will bring about prosperity unless all industries and business are operated and owned by the Federal Government, and I do not believe our people are receptive to such Government control.

It is indeed a topsy-turvy government in which the performers are reenacting the building of the Tower of Babel. In looking over our newspapers and after reading individual expressions like this, I am confused as to who is speaking for the Government: "Mrs. Roosevelt defends parade for Somoza," and "On the Record," a clipping in which European problems are discussed, which I quote:

No one can contend that a world war fought on the major sea lanes of the world is of no concern to the United States of America, or that the possible victory of Italy, Germany, and Japan, the two former powers united in a revolutionary philosophy hostile to everything that this country has ever stood for, could be a matter of indifference to the United States, or that, given such an outcome, this country would be safe.

I grant that Dorothy Thompson may be well enough acquainted with European rulers to express definite opinions which we cannot obtain. Personally, I must rely upon statistics, because I lack such acquaintanceships. However, in replying to this I can only say that we will be entirely safe if we mind our own business, and there is nothing in the philosophies of either country similar to our philosophy, so why worry about it? After they have fought for a number of years, the final outcome will spell finis for all of them, and they will have no desire to come another 2,500 mile to attack the United States. While they are fighting, we should consolidate and fortify everything from the Panama Canal north, in common defense and for the general welfare of the United States. There is nothing in Europe that we want, and we have too much of what they have now, so why not let them keep what they have? We should prepare ourselves by fortifying all islands which might be used as bases for operations against the United States.

In returning to my opening discussion of May the 1st, in which I referred to the invisible government, and to those who now own and control $15,000,000,000 in gold, it is my desire to say: After having received a communistic May Day circular by I. Amter, editor, with this heading " 'Reds' Bait Rich—Back F. D. R.," it dawned upon me why anyone who criticizes socialism and communism and the New Deal is called Fascist and Nazi. As a matter of fact, it is quite plain to me that anyone who supports our republican form of government, as proclaimed in the Constitution, is persona non grata to the Socialists and the Communists, for they are, as we know, bent upon destruction of constitutional government as it has been enjoyed by our people for 145 years.

In order to make this clear, I shall, so that those who have not seen this circular, quote a small part of it:

Today the issue is: Democracy versus reaction and fascism. In this struggle the Soviet Union stands solidly with the democracies for democracy and peace.

The Communist Party marches together with all progressives in the fight for the New Deal. We are front-rank fighters for the preservation of American democracy. The enemies of democracy, Hoover, Hearst, Coughlin, Dies, Morgan, Rockefeller, Ford—talk "Americanism," but their actions are un-American.

May Day 1939 takes place in the midst of the struggle for the very life of democracy. Like all progressives, and as part of the progressive democratic front—the front against reaction and fascism and for social and national security—we Communists declare that we will fight for American democracy against all enemies inside and outside our country.

In our own country, the Nazis and Fascists are carrying on immense activities. Today there are only two democracies that stand firmly for resistance to fascism. They are the United States and the Soviet Union.

It is indeed a sad day for our industries and business people when those such as Hearst, Morgan, Rockefeller, and Ford, and so forth, are called un-American by the Socialist and Communist. It is high time that every decent and self-respecting citizen step to the front, shoulder to shoulder, and drive these rats, not under cover, but out of the country. To think that the New Deal is a cohort of the Communist International is enough to set every patriotic American afire with righteous indignation.

For any working man to think that he can benefit by supporting these international pack rats is the height of optimism. If allowed to go on, it can only end in destroying labor and industry as well.

In addition to the May Day circular, I received, the United Front Bulletin, Editor E. Githens, which is another socialistic publication that is backing the New Deal Wagner Health Act. This act is another attempt to socialize medicine, as a bid for more votes. If passed, it will end like the rest, in complete deterioration of medicine, with less care and more suffering for those in need.

We are certainly sliding down the hill very rapidly and for this no one can be blamed except public indifference to its own fate. The New Deal is not only a misfortune, but it is national calamity which will bring about ruin to the country and to the people. This may be expected before 1940, or shortly thereafter. As further evidence of the supporters of the New Deal, I quote the fellowing clippings, taken from one of our local papers:

COMMUNISTS READY TO BACK THIRD TERM

NEW YORK, May 11.—The Communist Party of the United States will support President Roosevelt for a third term in 1940, Earl Browder, general secretary of the party, said tonight at the opening of the ninth national convention of the Young Communist League at Madison Square Garden.

If Mr. Roosevelt does not run again, Browder stated the Communists would support a "liberal" of the Roosevelt faction. Should a conservative Democrat be nominated, such as Vice President GARNER, Browder said, the Communists will join with "the radical one-third of the electorate" for the formation of a third party.

The question now to be decided by the American people is whether or not the United States is to be controlled by the invisible government, supported by the Communist International, or whether it is to be controlled by Congress as proclaimed in the Constitution and supported by patriotic citizens. In this question, each and every citizen should display a keen interest, and I include everyone within that group who still believes in the fundamental principles of our Government, and in the rights and liberties of the people.

If there is any question as to the intention of the administration, the statement I have just quoted from Earl Browder should be sufficient evidence that we are facing a life and death struggle at home. Socialism and communism are entrenched within the Federal Government in all departments and the dupes of this philosophy will be found in key positions. This is not an accident but a well-prepared plan by those who at the present time are directing the destiny of the Nation through the head of the Democratic party. Administration sympathies are vividly expressed in their appointments, because we know a few of those who are Socialists and Communists by their own commitments.

I am straightforward in my beliefs, so when a person informs me that he is a Communist, and that he believes in Federal ownership of all industries, I take him at his word. When he further informs me that he believes business is incompetent, he has classified himself as the greatest incompetent of all, for he evidently fails to appreciate that industry and business have been the creators of the Nation's prosperity for the past 150 years. When the same individual is appointed to office, it is only reasonable to assume that whoever appoints such person shares in his belief.

The power of the invisible government is clearly evident in the special F. B. I. investigations which are now directed against certain publications that support constitutional government, and to which anyone may subscribe. These publications are not secret, for I believe they are delivered free to every Congressman. The most contemptible of these snoopings are those conducted in private homes, in which the investigator requests information about publications delivered to the home.

I have had several letters advising me that such investigations are conducted at the present time, and what I desire are the names of those who give the orders for such investigations. I would like to have this answered by the F. B. I.

If any Federal investigation bureau is short of work, let it investigate socialism and communism. These may be found first in the Federal Government in Washington, and second, in practically every city in the United States. It is not hard to get a lead, because such subversive organizations publish their own papers and give the addresses so that anyone may find them. If the Federal Bureau of Investigation will bear in mind that the Italian, the German, and the Russian Governments are all socialistic in different degrees, much effort may be saved in looking for types of governments that do not exist.

During the 4½ months that I have been a Member of Congress I have stood squarely on the principles found in the Constitution of the United States, and I have advocated that each Federal department resume its rightful position according to the Constitution. I have opposed socialism and communism, and I have condemned those who favor such philosophies in preference to our own. I have criticized those who now own and control the $15,000,000,000 in gold in the United States Treasury because they have deprived my people of ownership of the only recognized international standard medium of value for money and for all securities. I have objected to this because it is inherently unjust to my people, not only in my own State but to all the people in all the United States. I have also criticized the coworkers and dupes of this invisible government because of their subversive activities which are deliberately directed toward destruction of our own Government. I now challenge those who labeled me a Nazi to state where I am wrong in taking this stand, and I hope those who accused me will accept this challenge.

Congress is now criticized for enacting antialien bills. This legislation was directed at those with criminal inclinations and was passed by a large majority of the Members. I shall quote part of this criticism:

Antialien bills now before Congress were characterized as "the entering wedge of fascism and dictatorship in our country" by Judge Patrick H. O'Brien, of the probate court, Wayne County, Mich., at the first session of the National Emergency Conference in the Raleigh Hotel yesterday afternoon.

This is a very interesting statement, and the question may be asked: What is fascism? The only place I have seen this mentioned is in communistic publications, sponsored by Earl Browder and others of his beliefs. It is a term used in all communistic papers, obviously to cover up their own activities. Fascism, as I understand it, exists in Italy, a country which is ruled by a king and a dictator. The Government itself is socialistic. The most absolute form of dictatorship and one rarely mentioned by those interested in the admission of refugees is in Russia, and the dictator is Joseph Stalin. It is he who has placed hundreds before the firing squad; it is he who has banished hundreds to Siberia; it is Stalin who has denied the Christian religion in Russia and closed Christian churches, and it is Stalin who with the utmost indifference has lined those who have helped him against the wall at dawn before the firing squad. He is the dictator in Russia, a country in which socialism and communism is supreme. It is his philosophy of government which is rampant in the United States, gradually but insidiously destroying our own republican form of government. Why is it that those who favor war in Europe and favor immigration from Europe are not afraid of his kind of dictatorship? Let those who complain answer this question.

I quote further:

Dr. Leiper, in opening the conference said, "It is difficult to understand why these bills have been introduced, because they deal with a problem that is virtually nonexistent. There is no alien problem in America * * *."

Replying to this, I can only say that the alien problem is ours and it is existent. It would be interesting to know how many recent entrants have applied for their first papers, particularly of those not within the quota. If the alien problem is not a problem here, then every Member of Congress is wrong. We have over 12,000,000 people unemployed and 8,000,000 more on part-time employment, which no one can deny is a problem in any country. I say, why take on more? We have denied entry to those who cannot assimilate with our people and no one objected to that.

We have reached the point where we should deny admittance to all who persist in adhering to their own philosophies, for they only reproduce their own kind, and for that reason will always be the same, today, tomorrow, and a thousand years hence. They have always been and will always be a separate and unassimilable people by their own choice.

The question now before the American people, and I mean the real American patriots, is, Shall we save the Government of the United States and perpetuate the American Nation, or shall we, in complete apathy, wait to be annihilated by the invisible government?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain resolutions by the State of Wisconsin on the question of the Walsh-Healey bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] in Philadelphia last Sunday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution passed by the General Assembly of the State of Pennsylvania regarding the tariff.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a tabulation showing the importation of meat products through the port of New York during 1 week, the week of March 10.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EQUALITY OF REPRESENTATION

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, we are all here because we were elected, which means politics. In a short while there is to be the 1940 election. I made a little talk on this floor the other day dedicated to the proposition that we ought to get to the point whereby we will encourage the election of men rather than sections, to lead both parties. Fourteen States have contributed Presidents of the United States, which means that 34 States have never given us a President. Mr. Lincoln, of the Star, wrote an article to this subject that I relish very highly and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include that article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial on the beef question appearing in yesterday's Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a toast to Colorado by my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMITTEE—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF HOUSE

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia be allowed to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-one Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 71]

Andrews	Curley	Jensen	Romjue
Ashbrook	Ditter	Kirwan	Schwert
Barden	Douglas	Lambertson	Scrugham
Bates, Mass.	Evans	Lea	Smith, Maine
Bell	Faddis	McCormack	Starnes, Ala.
Boren	Ford, Leland M.	McLeod	Sumners, Tex.
Brooks	Fernandez	McReynolds	Wallgren
Buckler, Minn.	Fries	Maloney	Weaver
Buckley, N. Y.	Harness	Mansfield	White, Idaho
Byrne, N. Y.	Harrington	Osmers	White, Ohio
Carter	Hartley	Parsons	Winter
Casey, Mass.	Havenner	Pierce, N. Y.	Wood
Culkin	Horton	Plumley

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and seventy-nine Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an editorial by Generoso Pope.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, under instructions from the Committee on the Judiciary, I have been authorized to make a brief statement to the House. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman for 1 minute at this time.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, under date of May 5 last, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] had passed by unanimous consent Senate Joint Resolution 111, designating August 19 of each year as National Aviation Day. It would appear that the impression was given that the resolution had theretofore been approved by the Judiciary Committee of the House, to which the bill had been referred. That is contrary to fact. Our committee had not favorably considered the bill.

I offer no disparagement of any Member, I criticize no Member, and I offer naught in derogation of any bill; but the Committee on the Judiciary joins me in calling the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the committee has before it scores of bills declarative of various holidays in memory of many celebrities. If we would pass all those bills, practically every day on the calendar would be a holiday. You can readily see, therefore, the difficulties under which the Committee on the Judiciary labors. We have bills declaring Base Ball Day, a bill declaring Humane Week, one declaring a holiday for Leif Ericson, another for Edison Day, and another for Von Steuben Day, and so on. They are all important bills in their way, but we ask that in the future, before anyone rises in his place and asks unanimous consent to consider any one of those bills, whether they have been passed by the Senate or otherwise, that he announce at the same time the action or nonaction taken by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and we will not have a repetition of what occurred on May 5 last. Assuredly no such bill should be considered, much less passed by unanimous consent, unless and until the Judiciary Committee has reported its approval.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Under the uniform practice, the Chair does not feel he should recognize the gentleman for an additional minute at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I shall not, as the gentleman is on his feet, but I shall object to any further time being taken until the business of the day has been disposed of.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I may say, following the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] that prior to asking unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 111, I spoke with the Speaker and with the majority leader and with the minority leader. I at no time, either in talking with them or in speaking on the floor, said that the Judiciary Committee had approved the same, but simply that the Senate on the preceding day had passed such a resolution, and it was my desire to call it up at that time. I have no desire to disagree with the gentleman from the Committee on the Judiciary and I am sure that all Members, including myself, would want to observe proper procedure always, in bringing legislation to the floor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including an announcement signed by three Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an editorial from the Hartford Courant of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a radio speech I made on Saturday last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFRIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL CLERK ALLOWANCE

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, and following the action of the House on May 9, I call up the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN].

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for pay to clerks to Members of Congress and Delegates," approved January 25, 1923 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 92), is amended by striking out "to one or two persons" and inserting in lieu thereof "to one, two, or three persons."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 60 (b)) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The clerk hire of each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner shall be at the rate of $6,500 per annum and shall be paid in accordance with the joint resolution of January 25, 1923, as amended: Provided, That no person shall receive a salary from such clerk hire at a rate in excess of $3,900 per annum."

SEC. 3. This act shall become effective on January 1, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the consideration of this bill is made possible by the Speaker, the majority and minority leaders, and the unanimous vote of the Committee on Accounts. It comes without a recommendation from the committee and it was agreed that it would be treated as a nonpartisan matter as it directly affects the privileges of the Members of the House. I have been informed on good authority that the other body will soon send here a bill concerning their own clerk allowance.

The bill now before us cannot be amended and must be voted up or down. After many years of consideration of the question, the Committee on Accounts realizes that the bill in its present form is the only fair and proper approach to the problem, as it treats all alike. It would increase the clerk allowance from $5,000 to $6,500. It would become effective on January 1, 1940, and would permit employment of one, two, or three clerks, provided no one would receive over $3,900, which is the highest amount allowed to a secretary of a Senator. For the record it should be stated that this clerk allowance is not permitted to be paid to a Member, but is paid out by the Clerk of the House only to those designated by Members as their secretary or clerk.

This bill will cost annually $657,000 plus some additional expense for desks and typewriters, half of which would be a charge against the next fiscal year.

There has been an insistent demand by some Members on both sides for this legislation. The vote will determine how much real demand there has been. In reporting this bill out the Committee on Accounts has tabled a bill which would pay mileage to secretaries because the leadership on both sides are convinced that this policy should not be established. We are also giving notice that no increase for committee clerks will be considered. Some Members, on account of the long and capable services of their secretaries, have given them almost the maximum of the present allowance, which leaves very little for the second clerk. Those who would not desire a third clerk could increase present salaries of the two, which would more than compensate for mileage for them.

I think this is a fair statement of the question. The need must be shown by others who speak. I do feel that the debate should proceed without bitterness or prejudice, and shall I also say with a minimum of demagoguery. [Applause.]

On account of my past views and votes on similar measures and on account of my insistence that the House should have a right to voice its opinion, and because I wish to be absolutely fair, if the roll is called I shall vote "Present," the first vote of that kind that I have ever cast in this body.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 4 minutes.

Mr. WARREN. I am sorry I cannot yield.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 28 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], who will have charge of the debate on the majority side, and 28 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOLFENDEN], who will have charge of debate on the minority side.

Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the question of whether we shall increase our office force and our office expense by more than $1,500 annually. I look upon this situation here of operating the Government as being quite similar to the operation of a private business, or my own business. When the president of our company, the board of directors, and the foreman and assistant foreman sit down together, if business is good, we feel quite liberal in spending money for improvements, but when the business of our concern is not so good we buckle up our belts and say to ourselves: "We must do more work in order to get this business operating satisfactorily and profitably. We will do everything we can to increase business so we can put more men on the pay roll. We will get up earlier in the morning and go to work; we will devote more hours of the day to the business, and at nightfall, if we are not through, we will continue on into the late hours of the night." This is the way we operate our private business. When, however, I look upon the way we are trying to operate the Federal Government in Washington—and let me say that I do not want to be a demagogue or to be classed with them—I wonder what the result will be with the efforts we put forth to make this a success for all the American people.

I think of the President of the United States as being the President of this great business enterprise. I think of the Senators as the board of directors. I look upon the Members of the House of Representatives, those who deal directly with the people and the employees—I look upon the Members as the foremen and assistant foremen of this great business enterprise. Then I say to myself, "Now, we are assembled here in Washington as a great business concern to do that which is best for the country." I think right at this moment of the 12,000,000 unemployed. I think of the Members of Congress as a body of men who want to see these people employed; and then I ask myself: "Is it right for us foremen and assistant foremen to give ourselves more help so that we may have more leisure time, or should we buckle right down and come to our offices earlier in the morning, and, if necessary, work late hours at night in order to be more efficient and to keep down our overhead expenses, yet be able to take care of the business and do a good job."

I think it is the duty of every Member of Congress to see that we get the wheels of industry in this country turning so that we can put more men on the pay rolls of industry and agriculture, but not the Government. This is what will give us a happy and contented American people. Are you men willing to do your part, or do you think we ought to increase the expenditures of Government by giving 435 additional clerks to Members of Congress, which will cost, as the gentleman from North Carolina stated, $657,000 annually to the taxpayers of this country? I tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is a vital thing in the life of our Nation. Can the American taxpayers stand this added burden of expense? Is the expense at this time justifiable? I say it is not.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Does not the gentleman know that it is not mandatory to appoint these additional clerks? Does not the gentleman know that the law at the present time does not require a Member to use any part of his $5,000? A Member does not have to employ any clerks if he does not need them.

Mr. RICH. I realize that, but so many men in Congress are doing so much political work by having clerks send out political discussions and statements, we are glutting the mails and doing other things that certain Members of Congress feel should be done. And too much of the work is personal; too much of the clerical work is for the selfish purpose of being reelected to Congress. Many of the Members do not need the money for clerk hire, yet they will all take it and spend it. That will happen as sure as the sun shines tomorrow morning; it is certain to happen.

Will we ever set an object lesson to the people of this country in economy by enacting this bill? I question if we can get a roll call if the bill passes. If we cannot, why sure it will pass. One reason why the demand for more clerk hire is because of the laws passed the past 6 years. I hope BRUCE BARTON can repeal a law a day for 6 weeks, and then surely we will not need any more clerks. Help him do it; that will help you and the the country as well. Look at the Treasury statement—forty billion in the red for our children to pay. With a debt so far this year to May 10 of $2,978,192,624.45—a horrible deficit—how can you have the nerve to pass this bill? How will our children pay the bills? We cannot. Where will you get the money?

I say, Mr. Speaker, there is no sense or business judgment in our passing this bill at this time.

The New Deal is responsible for our waste, for our 40 percent-increase in mail, for our indolence, for our inefficiency. The New Deal is responsible for the great unemployment. It is on its way out, and so will all of you who vote for this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER].

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the Members of the House that the chairman of the Committee on Accounts has presented this matter in a most favorable manner. This question has been before the Committee on Accounts as long as I have been a Member of Congress. There have been various methods and ways by which we have tried to give to those Members who really need additional help some assistance so that they could do their work, and at the same time not prejudice others who perhaps do not need it.

As the gentleman from New York stated a few moments ago, it is not compulsory for all Members of the House to take this additional allowance. I know of several instances where even under the present $5,000 allowance the Members do not have two secretaries or use the entire amount. This is not because of economy but simply the work in their districts do not warrant the additional clerks.

With reference to the proposition of compelling our clerks and secretaries to work longer hours, may I say to the Members of this body that we have enacted a wage and hour law. I believe the time and place to commence enforcement of legislation of that kind is right here among ourselves. In other words, let us start at home. Let us not force these long hours upon own clerks, because they are compelled to work long hours under the present situation. The wage and hour law provides for shorter hours in industry. Our clerks and secretaries today, in order to answer all of the mail, are required to work long hours. After all, the people who sent us here did so to answer their mail. We today answer communications and telegrams of our constituents, we send communications back to our districts as to what their requirements are and answer letters seeking information that compel our secretaries to make research, which it would be physically impossible for Members to do and attend to committee hearings and other duties.

Mr. Speaker, may I say in conclusion that it will not be compulsory for any Member who does not need this extra help to take this additional money for clerks. It will not be necessary in most instances to purchase additional desks and typewriters. In my own case, I will not need any because I employ an additional clerk and pay for that service out of my pocket. I hope this resolution will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the dean of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected each Member did all of his clerical work here on the floor of the House, where he had his desk. We did not have an office building then, and if our work was unfinished at the day's end we took it to our homes or hotels. Of course, that is a long time ago. It is not exaggerating to say that today each Member's office handles 20 times the amount of mail that reached Members 30 years ago. Now there are some who complain that because this represents an additional expense the resolution should be voted down and declare that Members should pay out of their own pockets the salaries of any needed additional clerical help. Mr. Speaker, I personally know a number of Members, including myself, who are now paying from $2,000 to $3,000 a year out of their own salaries for clerical aid they could not possibly do without.

To be sure, we have increased the allowances for clerk hire and even the salaries of Members since I came here. We have never been allowed to forget that fact. But I say this to you, that I know a great many Members here who possess executive ability far above that of many corporation executives who draw yearly salaries of from $25,000 to $250,000. And I might at this point compliment some of my Republican friends for the very special qualifications they possess as publicists and what I might term as high-powered salesmanship. Serving the vested interests well, it does seem to me that they would command excellent salaries from certain industries and corporations, far in excess of the salary they draw here. But then, on the other hand, results are what count, and it is a known fact that they have not succeeded very well in selling the voters on the Republican Party. I doubt that gentlemen of even greater ingenuity would have much success. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, my many years of service have acquainted me with the demands made upon Members of Congress and their clerical staff. During the past few years especially there has been an increased interest in what the Government is doing, and the people as a matter of course address all inquiries to their Congressmen. We all know that there come to us daily hundreds of letters on legislation, departmental matters, and on every other conceivable subject. These are communications that cannot be answered by form letters. They demand considerable research and study, and it takes a capable office force to see that they are expeditiously and properly handled. Then, too, there have sprung up the myriad propaganda factories, instigating one succeeding deluge after another of mail seeking to bring pressure on Members.

I hope the Members will bear in mind that this resolution does not apply to the present Congress. It takes effect at the beginning of next session, and some of those who vote for it now will never enjoy its benefits. They know, however, as all of us do, that the great pressure of work in their offices makes it imperative that additional help be made available to all Members. For these reasons, on which I do not want to take up too much time in argument, I feel that the membership of this House is justified, notwithstanding the additional expense, to vote for this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, up to the present time we have already exceeded a deficit of $3,000,000,000 for the present fiscal year. We will be presented with a bill from the Ways and Means Committee continuing taxes. We have a public debt, direct and indirect, guaranteed and otherwise, exceeding $46,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, do the people feel that we should increase the allowance that is made to us for clerk hire $1,500 a year apiece under these conditions? Frankly, I do not see how I can vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, in response to my colleague on the other side of the aisle, may I say that it was the intention of the people of his district and of the people in the district of every Congressman here that he receive a salary of $10,000 a year. The district I represent, according to the 1930 Federal census, contains 800,000 people, but, according to the New York City census of 1938, it contains 1,100,000 people. I have more people in my congressional district than there are in 12 States of this Union, despite the fact that the Senators from those 12 States, who do not have near the volume of correspondence I have, receive somewhere around $10,000 a year for clerical hire.

It is impossible for me or any other man who has a large district to do the proper work for the people of his district and to accede to their demands and their desires on the present clerical allowance. I myself am compelled to spend from my own pocket $3,750 a year, or $7,500 a term, merely to meet the needs of my people. I do not do what the gentleman from Pennsylvania mentioned—send out political matter. I believe there are very few men in this House who do that. I believe the Members in fairness to those who have large districts should do everything in their power to pass this bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'TOOLE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman has a million people in his district it seems to me the State of New York should make a redistribution so the gentleman would have a proper allotment.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Unfortunately, there has not been a reapportionment in the State of New York in the last 40 years. That cannot be charged to either myself or this body. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we should be providing for those in distressed circumstances at home, and providing jobs for the great number of unemployed instead of considering legislation providing for expenditures in our own offices. I shall vote against this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is simply a question of efficiency. I do not believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] would operate his factory without machinery of the most efficient kind. While I do not liken the employees of our office staffs to machinery, nevertheless, they achieve one result that machinery also produces—multiplication of associated manpower.

We may very easily reduce the arguments against this bill to an absurdity—and it seems to me they add up to that—by asking why we provide ourselves with offices? We do not need them; we could stand around on the streets when not in committee or in the House. Why do we provide ourselves with any secretaries? If we want to save money, let us fire them all. Why do we have typewriters and other labor-saving devices in our offices? We could, by confining ourselves to writing letters in long hand and being economical in the use of words, so as to limit letters to one page, avoid the purchase of stapling tools. We do not need carbon copies if we are clear in what we have to say, and make memoranda for future reference. Thus we could save the expense of the copy sheets and carbon paper.

When you consider this whole matter fairly, is not this simply a question of whether or not we mean to do our job as our constituents require and expect of us? If we are to do this, then we must have additional help in our offices, for the burden has become too great for us to carry with the aid of our present assistants. There is hardly a man in this body who does not have to spend money out of his own pocket now for additional clerical help. It is not what we want to do, it is what our constituents want us to do. They want service, and they cannot get it unless we provide ourselves adequately with office machinery to do the job they want done. I submit that the employment of an additional clerk will multiply the value of every Congressman to his constituency and to this Government. [Applause.]

It has been suggested that we could work longer hours. Some of us could. But most of us now work from 12 to 16 hours a day and many Sundays. This is already a suicide club. The work we do here on the floor is, of course, a very small part of the total. Yet even on the floor we worked 12 hours one day to pass a law that no one should work more than 8.

In addition to all the other reasons which justify the passage of this bill, I wish to invite your serious consideration to this argument: The more we spare ourselves from the harassing grind of detail, the more time we will have for our real job and the better we will do it. We are not filing clerks nor stenographers. We may not be statesmen. But we have not a chance to be as good statesmen as we might be because of the incubus of the work of which another clerk would relieve us. If the passage of this bill will give us a chance to be better statesmen, the authorized appropriation will not be an extravagance but a wise investment. It should result in an annual saving of many times the cost. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill to increase the allowance for congressional help. I should consider it gravely wrong if this measure were to pass.

Here we are, headed straight for national bankruptcy. Who can possibly question that the outstanding and most pressing problem of every Congressman is, or should be, to stop the wild and uncontrolled spending that is taking place? Will it help our position to stop this spending if we here now vote to increase our own costs? I do not think so. On the contrary, I believe it would greatly weaken it.

It is my humble opinion that the people throughout the length and breadth of this land would not look with much favor upon the passage of this bill. I am inclined to think they would look upon it with much disfavor.

I am mindful that many Congressmen may be in real need of additional funds for help. But under the circumstances I do not believe any increase can possibly be justified.

Inasmuch as I feel it to be my first and foremost duty to do everything within my power to balance the National Budget and straighten out our national finances, I must protest and vote against this bill. Either economy begins here at home now or, in my humble opinion, it will not begin at all. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I am going to run the risk of being classed as a demagogue. After my distinguished and most lovable friend from North Carolina stated that he hoped there would be no demagoguery in this debate he wound up by saying, "My attitude is going to be open and aboveboard, because if the roll is called on this bill I am going to pass." [Laughter.] I am not going to do that. If the roll is called on this bill I am going to vote against it [applause], and I am going to vote against it because I do not think I can kid the people of America or in my portion of the country, and I am not trying to kid them about this matter.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I have not time to yield.

You cannot make the American people believe that they are so much in love with the accomplishments of this Congress that they want to hand them $1,500 additional as a kind of compliment for the service they have rendered the common people of this country in the Seventy-sixth Congress. They know what we have done here, and they come very near knowing in reality, when it comes to the common herd, that this Congress has done nothing for them, and the thing for you to do is to get down here and pass something like the cost-of-production bill for the farmers [laughter and applause], and then pass a decent law for labor, and then go to the people and they will not quibble about giving you $1,500 additional for clerk hire, but they would even make it $15,000. If you would serve them, they would serve you; but the way it is now the people are not going to be tickled or pleased enough to hand you $1,500 additional.

Now, I want to call your attention to this further fact, and I am sincere about this statement. We need more help. I grant you that; but if we are going to have more help, there ought to be pay enough in it for the fellow who comes up here from Oklahoma. The boy or girl who comes here to take a job ought to get money enough out of it to pay his way to Washington and pay his board while he is here and then pay his railroad fare back there. He cannot do this on $1,500 a year; but if you would make it something like the Senate makes the pay for their help, then we could get competent, capable help to transact the business of a Congressman. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I am like my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE]. I am for cost of production, but I am likewise for cost of running my office in regard to clerical hire over and above my salary. [Laughter and applause.]

I am for this bill largely upon the ground stated by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] when he said that the primary purpose of this bill is efficiency in our offices.

If you will pardon me for being personal, I represent the largest congressional district in the United States where a State has been divided into districts. Likewise I represent 360,000 good people with varied interests. I simply cannot carry on the business of my office with two clerks. Therefore I pay one clerk out of my salary.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. This is not a question of partisanship in the slightest. It is, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, one of need.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is right.

Mr. LEAVY. And if we need these clerks we ought to vote for this bill. We ought to be courageous enough to do that. If we do not need them, we ought to vote against it, and if we vote against it, when the bill becomes effective we should refuse to spend the money because we do not need them.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If there is any Member who does not need this extra help, there is nothing in this proposed law to compel him to hire the help. I have the utmost faith in my colleagues and know they will not hire the extra clerk unless he is needed. You should give us who need the help a chance to render our people the kind of service to which they are entitled.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KRAMER. That same thing prevails with respect to the mileage, because many of the Members from the West, as well as other places, come here and when they do not go back following a special session, they turn back the mileage they do not use, because they did not require it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

I want to make this statement to the Members of the House: There is no man in this House stronger for sane economy than I am. I have run my own business on a basis of economy hiring only those I need and I have succeeded to some extent. I never did this by expending money that was not necessary. I am following the same course as a Member of Congress. It is only when I need the help that I hire it, and up to date I have been paying some of my clerk hire out of my own pocket. I ask you to support the bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I not only am going to speak for this bill, I am going to vote for it, and, if it carries, I propose to use the clerk so provided. Were I in a situation where I did not need an additional clerk and other Members did, I still would vote for this resolution and then not use the clerk unless I absolutely needed one. [Applause.]

My people in New Mexico are highly intelligent people—they can read and write. [Laughter.] When they write letters they expect answers and they get answers immediately. There are no two clerks living who can answer the volume of mail that comes into my office. For that reason, during the time I have been a Member of the Congress, I have had an extra clerk at all times that I personally paid. I am quite willing to do this if the Congress thinks I should. However, I feel that in voting appropriations for the different departments and giving them liberal clerk hire and a sufficient number of people to carry on their business, we should not ask our clerks to work day and night, Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays. I think it is a great disgrace and an injustice. I do not propose to stand idly by because somebody in my district may feel that I am personally getting $1,500, which I am not going to get.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. If you are figuring on getting additional clerks, how do you expect the taxpayers to pay them?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, there are six States of this Nation that have only one Representative in this House for each State. Four of those States are in the West and they are large States, such as that represented by my friend who just left the floor [Mr. DEMPSEY], New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Wyoming. There are two in the East. My work, like that of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], is very heavy.

We have in Arizona not only a large area, but a population close to 500,000 people, nearly twice that of the Federal ratio, and we have diversified and sometimes conflicting interests. We have nine large national forests, many of the largest Indian reservations in the country, and five times as many ex-service men living in Arizona than she ever furnished to the wars. My desk is covered with letters asking that something be done for this or that ex-service man. Their problems, though numerous and difficult, I am glad to solve or attempt to solve. Then we have many other matters of Federal activity.

I, too, like the gentleman from New Mexico, have hired additional clerks ever since I came to Congress, at a cost of between $1,600 and $2,000 annually for the 3 years, thus far. It may be that some Members here are so well to do that they can afford to work without salary and can spend their own salaries in this way. Should this body be made up only of well-to-do persons who do not need a salary and can pay for extra help?

I remind you that 100 years ago, to be exact, in 1832, one of the demands in England was that the members of the House of Commons be paid a salary so that all of the people might be duly represented instead of the rich class only. I remind you that 60 or 70 years ago in Germany it was a demand of popular government that the members of the Reichstag be paid salaries. You might just as well demand that we serve in this body without pay as that we pay our own clerks; help that we absolutely need. I am for this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I, too, represent a very intelligent constituency of nearly 400,000 people. They not only can read and write but they do write. It seems to me that almost every one of them writes in the course of a year.

We are the representatives of the people in our respective districts. We are the connecting link between them and the many departments, bureaus, commissions, and agencies of the Federal Government. As the Federal Government has embarked on many matters affecting directly a large part of our population, the people of our districts constantly have need to call on their Representatives for information and help.

I have always encouraged the people of my district to write me. I am always anxious to be of service to them and to have their suggestions. None of their letters ever reach the wastebasket. They receive prompt consideration at the hands of my secretaries and myself.

The communications from my district have more than doubled in the last few years, and it has been necessary for me to employ other people to help serve my district. My office needs this additional help. Every citizen, however humble, is entitled to prompt, efficient, and courteous service. This additional clerk in my office will be of great benefit to my constituents. It will cost each one of my constituents on an average about 1 cent in 3 or 4 years. No constituent of mine will have any just cause to complain of this additional 1 cent every 3 or 4 years in taxes. When I go home I intend to carry some pennies in my pocket, and if I find a constituent condemning me for my vote and thereby making it possible to render the very best service to him and to my other constituents, I shall give to him or any other person complaining a penny and say, "There is your part of these taxes for the next 3 or 4 years." [Applause.]

Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, as one of the Members who come from a pretty busy district, who has had to dig down in his jeans ever since he came here to pay for extra help, I am here to say without fear of the public at large or the people of my district that I am going to vote for this bill, and for an alibi back home, if any of my constituents ask me why I voted to increase the clerk hire, I shall give them this answer: When this administration can spend, as they will spend, almost $300,000 or more to entertain a British King and Queen next month, I think I can afford to vote for this extra help for my office. That is my answer. If this Government can take and spend this money to entertain the King and Queen of a foreign government that owes us over $5,000,000,000 in war debts, I think I have a perfect explanation in that to my people. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield whatever time he desires to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. MCLEAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that each Member of Congress shall have an additional allowance of $1,500 per year for clerk hire. That would mean an increase in the expenses of Congress for salaries of clerks of $652,000 annually, to which should be added the incidental expenses. Each clerk, to be of any use, must be provided with a desk and typewriter, which will add another $75,000. The use of the telephone, which is paid for on a per-call basis, will increase with the addition of each new employee, and each of these new clerks will be entitled to all the perquisites of an officer of the House, including funeral expenses and death gratuities, also an additional clerk will be required in the office of the disbursing clerk to attend to pay rolls and checks.

This proposition was rejected in 1935. There was more need of additional clerical assistance then than there is now, and there is greater need of economy in government now than there was then. I am opposed to the proposal now, as I was then. Only yesterday announcement was made that the deficit in Government operation for the current year will exceed three billions, and that this deficit will increase the national debt to upwards of forty billions.

Much has been said about service to one's constituents. I agree with the sentiment, and I would add to it another and larger service which I believe a Congressman owes to his people and to the country—that is the obligation of leadership and example. If we advocate reorganization in the interest of retrenchment, is it not our first duty to retrench? If we advocate economy in government—and there is no one here who does not—should not we who guide the destinies of the land be the first to economize?

I am as busy as any Member of Congress. The population of my district is comparable to any district in the country, approximating 310,000 people. My time is sorely taxed. My mail is heavy. My district is in close proximity to Washington, and I have as many visitors as any Member of Congress. I do my share of committee work, and I am faithful in my attendance at sessions of the House. Like the rest of you, I find considerable research and study necessary. My staff is efficient, familiar with my district, and we manage to get along by attending to business. While Congress is in session our hours are long and our work exacting, but for the balance of the year our duties are not onerous.

It does not seem to me, at this time when life is so difficult for so many of our constituents, that we should be making life easier for ourselves. It seems to me that it would be better for us to demonstrate to the country that by being industrious Congress can be economical, and that, after all, we are not job seekers or patronage mongers, and by our own example demonstrate our hope for a reduction in Federal spending and a balanced Budget.

An additional expense of $750,000 for congressional clerk hire may not seem large when our minds are tuned to thinking in billions, but it is a respectable amount in the habit of life and thought of the average taxpayer, and will amount to something when we get around to the payment of the constantly increasing public debt.

The American people look to the Congress for example and leadership. The consideration of this matter at this time in the light of existing demands for economy detracts from its dignity and will lessen the confidence of the American people in the House of Representatives.

Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am for this bill and I am sorry the amount is not double what it is so that the need would be adequately met. I was rather shocked at the distinguished and amiable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] when he introduced the absurd, overworked, and shop-worn inferiority complex at the beginning of his address by stating that we in this body were all mere hired help, while the other legislative body constitutes the national board of directors. Mr. Speaker, we are not subforemen, nor even foremen, as the gentleman suggests. We in this House are free representatives of 130,000,000 of free people. We hold in our keeping the purse strings of the Nation. We are the keystone in the arch of constitutional government; and we ought to stand up and be counted as dignified Members of this great body and not act like a lot of scare cats who are afraid to vote their convictions on this or any other bill. [Applause.]

I am in favor of this bill because we have always before us tremendous problems of legislation of vital importance to our Nation and, in some cases, to the world, which ought to take our entire attention, whereas we spend most of our time attending to secondary matters that we could better turn over to competent help, if we had it.

In the second place, I am for this bill because our clerks are in many cases now cruelly overworked, and if there ever was a faithful, intelligent, useful, and deserving body of workers in this Nation it is the group composed of the secretaries and clerks of the Members of this House. [Applause.]

I am for this bill because, under the divine afflatus of the New Deal, the Government has thrust itself into the life of every citizen and has hurt him. We have too often passed laws here demanded by the administration and by the citizen, and the first thing we know the citizen appears here demanding that his Congressman help him evade the very law he tried to get passed and which he believed was to operate in his interest. You cannot do that without help. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. of New Jersey. With pleasure.

Mr. RICH. You say that this body holds the purse strings of this Nation?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICH. If you can take this statement and show me where you have got any purse strings to hold I would like to have you do it. This body has let the purse strings go and nobody knows where they are. Everything has run out.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I thank the gentleman for his assistance in making this a very intelligent speech. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, as it is going on 27 years that I came to Washington and since that time I have served continuously in some capacity with the United States Congress, first as a secretary to a Representative in Congress, next as a secretary to a Senator, then as secretary of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, and now serving my eighth term in Congress as a Representative, I feel that I am competent to speak in reference to the business that not only confronts the Representatives but also their office forces.

It is my honest opinion that unless one has efficient and loyal assistants in his office, his or her life as a Member of Congress will be short.

This bill provides for an increase of one assistant in an office of a Representative. A personal investigation on my part warrants me in saying the situation now confronting Members of the House justifies its passage. When I say "a personal investigation," I mean a personal investigation, because I visited the offices of about 60 Members of the House and also had an interview with the postmaster that handles our mail.

I have a letter from the House Postmaster and in that letter he says that in the last 8 years, and he emphasizes that his statement is not exaggerated, there has been an increase in the mail of from 30 to 40 percent.

While the postmaster of the city of Washington does not keep a separate record as to the volume of mail received by Members of Congress, his figures do show an increase between 1931 and 1939 of 20 percent in the volume of incoming mail received for delivery in this city.

The letter from our Postmaster is as follows:

OFFICE OF POSTMASTER,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1939.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: Reference is made to your call at this office on Tuesday of this week, at which time you requested information as to the volume of incoming letter mail currently received by the House Post Office as compared with the volume that was being received when I became postmaster upon the convening of the Seventy-second Congress in December 1931.

So far as I know, it has never been the practice of this office to keep such records of receipts of mail as would enable me to give definite comparative figures along the line indicated. However, I am sure that an estimate of increase in the past 8 years ranging from 30 to 40 percent would be no exaggeration. I am basing this statement not only on my own observation but on reports made to me by employees who have been on our force the greater part of the above period, and who have been employed in a capacity that would afford them an intelligent opinion as to changing volume of mail.

In addition, the Washington postmaster has just written me in response to my request for information as to the volume of incoming letter mail received for delivery in the city of Washington for the quarter ending March 31, 1931, as compared with the same period of 1939, that his records show an increase of 20 percent. It is a recognized fact that the increase in the receipt of congressional letter mail has been materially more than proportionate. It does not seem to me that it properly comes within the scope of this statement to enumerate and discuss contributing causes of such increase. They are well known to you.

It may appear to you, whose letter mail has probably more than doubled since the beginning of the Seventy-second Congress, that the estimate of increase submitted by me is definitely on the conservative side. I prefer that it should be just that.

Sincerely yours,

FINIS E. SCOTT,
Postmaster, House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, why is it that there has been such a great increase in our mail? It is because of the continual growth of the executive branch of our Government due to laws passed by the Congress.

This morning I reached the House Office Building before 8 o'clock and I counted 67 machines around the building, and I did not visit the parking lot. There is no 40-hour week nor an 8-hour day in the office of a Representative in Congress. His hours of labor and those of his office force are subject to the volume of work which results from requests made upon him, as well as his legislative duties.

When I first came to Washington the great majority of the people of this country only received a weekly newspaper. Today there is not a hamlet in the United States where a resident could not receive a metropolitan newspaper on the same day it was issued. The people know what is going on.

I am inclined to feel, however, that the radio is responsible for the increase in our business more than the press. You know, as I know, that the commentators review the happenings of the day and bring to the homes information that might otherwise not be received. They not only cover the activities of the Congress, but of the various agencies of the executive branch. Then we have the publicity division of almost every Government agency flooding the country with information in reference to their activities.

As you know, there is a well-known clergyman who is on the radio every Sunday. Within 36 hours after he has spoken I can tell by my mail the subject of his discussion, although I may not have read a line of it, nor heard him over the radio.

My district lies entirely within the city of St. Louis, but you undoubtedly will be surprised when I tell you that the demand upon me for agricultural bulletins and the Agriculture Yearbook is just as heavy as that which comes to the man who represents a rural constituency. Why is this? It is because over the radio the people are told of the publications of the Department and advised to write their Congressman for them.

I recall when we had one or two visitors a week from home. Now businessmen by the score flock to Washington every week, while the automobile brings hundreds of visitors who did not come in the old day. We must see all that call because as their Representative it is our duty.

I read in this morning's paper where 10,000 bills and resolutions have already been introduced in this Congress, although we are only in the first session. One or two thousand was a reasonable number of public bills that were introduced 25 years ago.

You have pending in the Congress today three questions in the form of legislation, and the mail received by me in connection with each is sufficient to keep one person busy all day long replying. I refer to amendments to the Wage and Hour Act, amendments to the National Labor Relations Board Act, and proposed neutrality legislation.

You have in Washington today possibly 500 men and women who represent every conceivable kind of an organization. They supply those who employ them with daily and weekly letters. As a result, at meetings of chambers of commerce, boards of trade, farm organizations, as well as women's clubs, we are flooded with communications in reference to matters in which the members are directly interested. It is needless for me to tell you the work that comes to us as a result of the World War and social-security laws will continue to come to every Representative for many years. I could go on and enumerate many other conditions that have increased our office work.

It is true that a great deal of our mail, routine, is handled by our secretary and office force after we have indicated to them our views on pending legislation, but there is a class of mail that requires our personal attention, which we must dictate. We are not happy when we receive a letter from a businessman in the morning demanding that we reduce expenditures, that we revise the tax law, that we come to the aid of business in various ways, and then in the afternoon we hear from his wife who is a member of clubs demanding that we vote for Federal aid for education, Federal aid for health, pass laws to stop the pollution of streams, which means more Federal aid, and many other bills which I could mention if time permitted.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I have made a personal investigation of the situation that confronts the Representatives of Congress, and, as it was my duty as the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Accounts to consider this legislation, I likewise conceive it my duty to inform the House of my findings, which I have done.

It might be true that some Members of the House do not at the moment require any additional assistants. If they do not, then there is no language in this legislation that would require them to accept the additional help provided.

Feeling that the people that we represent are entitled to prompt and efficient service in connection with their demands upon us, it is my purpose to support this legislation.

The rules of the House will not permit me to refer to the other body, but there is nothing in the rules to prevent me from stating my experience as an employee of the Senate, and I can tell you that during the time that I served as an employee of the Senate in charge of offices there was no time that I lacked proper assistance and an office force that enabled me to properly handle the business that came to the Senator. When business increased we received more help.

Recently we gave the President six additional assistants because of an increase in the volume of business in his office. Almost every appropriation bill that is brought in provides for additional help because of additional duties that have been placed upon the executive branch of the Government by the passage of new laws. This statement is supported by the statistics, which show we have more civilian employees in the Government today than we ever had in peacetimes. Who provided them? We did. Just 2 weeks ago the standing committee of the House press gallery came to the Accounts Committee and said the volume of business had so increased that they could not get along unless they had another messenger. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOLFENDEN] and myself were appointed a subcommittee to investigate. We did investigate, found their request was justified, brought in the bill, and it was passed without one vote in opposition. Mrs. Daly has been in charge of our telephones almost since the switchboard was put in. We have continually increased the service, until today we find it is by far the busiest telephone exchange in the city of Washington. Not long ago we were required to provide additional operators.

Surely if we can take care of others, when we honestly know that to properly perform our duties we need additional help, I see no reason why we should hesitate to pass the necessary legislation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under the unanimous consent governing consideration of this bill, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks for the yeas and nays. Those who favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted.

The Chair will count the membership present to ascertain if a sufficient number have risen. [After counting.] Three hundred and forty-four Members are present. Only 35 Members rose in support of the demand for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays are refused.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 237, noes 95.

So the bill was passed.

By unanimous consent, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRIVATE CALENDAR—OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILLS

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first omnibus claims bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6182. A bill for the relief of sundry aliens.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read title I.

MARIO SIGISMONDO NASCINOVICH

The Clerk read as follows:

Title I—(H. R. 358. For the relief of Mario Sigismondo Nascinovich and his wife, Vittoria Nascinovich.)

That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to cancel the warrants of arrest and the orders of deportation against Mario Sigismondo Nascinovich and his wife, Vittoria Nascinovich, heretofore issued on the grounds that on or about July 1, 1926, admission to the United States had been fraudulently gained pursuant to the commission of a passport or visa offense which, subsequent to such admission, has heretofore been held by the Attorney General of the United States to be within the purview of "crimes involving moral turpitude," and thereupon Mario Sigismondo Nascinovich and his wife, Vittoria Nascinovich, shall hereafter be deemed to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence at New York, N. Y., on April 18, 1927. Any declarations of intention to become citizens or any petitions for citizenship heretofore filed by or any admissions to citizenship ordered and certificates of naturalization heretofore issued to Mario Sigismondo Nascinovich and his wife, Vittoria Nascinovich, which were predicated upon the claim of lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence on or about July 1, 1926, shall hereafter be deemed valid unless the original 7-year period of validity of such declarations of intention have heretofore expired or Mario Sigismondo Nascinovich and his wife, Vittoria Nascinovich, have heretofore been found otherwise not eligible to such benefit under the naturalization laws.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, line 6, after the words "have been", strike out "lawfully."

In lines 10 and 11 of the same page, after the word "heretofore", insert "or hereafter."

In line 13 strike out the words "which were."

In line 15 of the same page, after the word "deemed", strike out the remainder of the title and insert in lieu thereof the following: "null and void."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is one of a series which are intended to take care of a situation that has been before the Congress during the past 4 years.

A number of aliens have come into this country upon passports which were subsequently found to be illegally issued or to have been fraudulently obtained by the immigrant. During the last Congress the bills were objected to when they first appeared on the Private Calendar. They were placed in an omnibus private claims bill, but unfortunately the House was not able to complete its action upon the bill, so the bills are again before us in this Congress. In view of the fact that the House apparently signified an intention to pass the bill by approving each individual title of the omnibus bill which received consideration during the last Congress, the objectors have offered this amendment to this particular bill, and it is our intention to offer a similar amendment to each of the subsequent bills.

The purpose of the amendment is to allow this alien to remain permanently in the United States but to deny to him both now and hereafter any right to become a citizen of the United States. In view of the fact that the aliens have entered the country illegally through some fraud either on their own part in which they may have been participants, or through fraud that may have been performed in their behalf, the alien being entirely innocent of any wrongdoing, we nevertheless feel that the alien should not be treated in the same manner as other aliens who have fully complied with the law and entered the country legally and are here in accordance with our immigration laws. Because it would work a hardship in many cases to deport these aliens some 10 or 15 years after their entrance into the country we believe that they should not be sent back to their native country. It would mean the separation of families, since the alien would leave in this country either husband or wife and two or three minor children. In many instances the wife and children are citizens of the United States. These members of the family would be left here and the husband returned to his native country and be forever barred from readmission to the United States.

By adopting these amendments we would allow the person to remain in this country but deny him citizenship. Otherwise we would take from him no right to which he might be entitled.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. The amendment the gentleman has just offered is similar to several that were offered by himself and by myself to bills of this character when they first came before the Congress on the Private Calendar 4 years ago.

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HANCOCK. Does the gentleman recall that the chairman of the Committee on Immigration accepted those amendments at that time? Yet the bills come back here under an omnibus bill in the same identical language. Is that correct?

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. HANCOCK. Does the gentleman recall that the chairman of the Committee on Immigration agreed to the correctness of the amendment which is now offered when these matters first came before us?

Mr. COSTELLO. I think that is correct. I believe it would have saved a great deal of time if the bills had been written in that form, because the amendment is somewhat complicated in view of the fact it is necessary to strike out the word "lawfully" wherever it occurs in the bill and have the bill provide that the alien shall be deemed to have been admitted for permanent residence to the United States; likewise, new language will have to be put in providing that any declaration of intention to become a citizen or any petition for citizenship heretofore or hereafter filed by the alien shall be deemed null and void, so that any proceedings that may have been instituted at any time prior to this date shall become null and void and the alien shall not be entitled to citizenship at any time.

We feel the amendments should be agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, we have now arrived at a place where those of us who have been more or less active in these immigration matters will have to take a definite stand. Up until about 5 years ago the Congress did not entertain private bills giving relief in special cases having to do with the correction of immigration records of aliens.

There was a reason for that. A basic principle runs throughout our laws on this question, and today we are going to surrender this principle if we are not careful. We are going to violate a provision that we have loyally adhered to all of these years. We have always maintained that an alien had no rights in this country until he arrived here, and that he had nothing but privileges after he arrived until he became an American citizen.

Now an individual comes into the country and it is acknowledged that he came here on false passports or in violation of the immigration law, and we say "Let him stay here, it will work a hardship on him if we send him out."

This amendment is offered and I know it is proposed simply as a matter of expediency. I dare say these gentlemen in their own hearts are not in favor of a proposition like this, but they must offer an amendment of this sort on account of the great avalanche of private bills that has been thrust upon us. This amendment improves the bill but it still fails to reach the principle that is violated.

Mr. Speaker, about 2 weeks ago we objected to and struck from the Private Calendar about 55 similar bills. Every one of them, with the possible exception of one or two, involved aliens who had entered this country illegally. The report admits they are here illegally. We struck them all off and now we come in here today, in this stressful time, when the Congress is hardly in order, and are about to consider this large bunch of bills in an omnibus bill. I dare say few of the Congressmen present are informed on what these bills provide. I am not a member of the Committee on Immigration, and I cannot possibly study all these bills, and I have not studied very many of them. However, I have gone through about a half dozen of these bills, and in every one I see the statement that the person sought to be favored has illegally entered, committed perjury or some other offense against the laws of the country from which he came and of our country. Laws laid down by our own Congress with reference to aliens and their admission. Today we are going to set all of that aside and allow them to stay here and become citizens if the bill passes. If we agree to this amendment, it will only change the bill so that they cannot become citizens. What will be the next bill that the Immigration Committee will bring in? In 2 or 3 months it will bring in a bill giving these persons the right to become citizens. That is the natural outgrowth of such things.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon those Members who are restrictionists, those Members who have helped build up the restrictive immigration laws of this country to speak and vote their convictions and say what they have in their minds and what they think ought to be done. We are pulling up an anchorage we have adhered to from the very foundation of our country. We are sitting idly by and permitting a bill of this kind to be brought in and passed. There are 50 or 55 of the same kind involved in this omnibus bill, and not more than 2 or 3 could stand the scrutiny of an honest investigation. They are brought in here because some Congressman feels this fellow is a rich man or has some rich friends. What are the consequences? A great flock of bills of all kinds without any merit.

These cannot be compared to a private bill having to do with aid to a veteran. There is absolutely no comparison. A veteran takes the initiative, he stands up for his country, and, of course, we have a right to consider him because he is an American citizen. We should grant him every encouragement. But, in reference to these bills, there cannot be more than two or three of them that have any merit at all.

What are you going to do about it? Am I going to have to make this speech every time one of these comes up? I shall refuse to do that. You have been put on notice. I call upon those who have been parading under the banner of restriction to vote down each and every one of these bills and let them be referred back to the committee. A new Committee on Immigration has been appointed in this session of Congress, and it consists of a fine bunch of new members who have not yet become acquainted with the importance of this proposition. They do not know how big it is. They do not know how many years it has taken to get us this far. Let them pass on these matters with deliberation.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. LANHAM]. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members are present, not a quorum.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

PRIVATE CALENDAR—OMNIBUS BILLS

MARIO SIGISMONDO NASCINOVICH AND VITTORIA NASCINOVICH

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may say to the gentleman that an amendment is pending.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer my amendment as a substitute for the pending amendment. My amendment is to strike out title I.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not consider that amendment as a substitute for the pending amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio) there were—ayes 40, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: Beginning on page 1, line 3, strike out all of title I.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who were not here when we first entered on the discussion of this matter, I may repeat at the expense of being a little tedious that this is our situation now: We are considering an omnibus bill that provides for the admission to citizenship of half a dozen or more aliens. They have come into this country illegally. I believe I have gone over the papers on each and every case. The amendment we have just defeated, which was a good amendment as far as it went, provided that these people should stay in this country but should not become citizens. My proposition is to strike out this title, with what idea in mind? My idea is this—that this matter should go back to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization for further consideration. The bill now under consideration was considered in the last Congress. The Committee on Immigration as now constituted I dare say has a majority of new members who never did consider this bill or any of the bills in this omnibus bill. It is only fair to them that these matters go back to them, as they are a part of this Congress, so they may consider these cases and bring in the bills which they approve in the right way.

We ought to strike out this first title, really, on its demerits. Why? Because it involves a man who admits he came into this country illegally. He came in on seaman's papers and lost himself in the populace, hid himself out for years, and sent back to a foreign country and brought in his sweetheart and married her here. She came in as a visitor and married. The whole transaction is illegal. Not only illegal, but it is an insult to the intelligence of the American people when these people willfully violate our immigration laws and then with crocodile tears ask us to set the laws aside and permit them to do as they please. Our immigration laws are formed for the purpose of admitting the best people, the good people, and thousands of good people come in legally. They comply with the law. Of course, our laws restrict the entry of persons who have criminal records. When a criminal gets in we should not worry about him and give him concessions the law-abiding aliens do not get. The immigration laws provide a way that people can come in. If a man cannot come into this country legally and then comes in illegally, why give him any special consideration?

We are not trying to send these aliens out of the country, and do not let anybody worry you and shed tears about the fact that we are going to send them out. This man has been here 13 years and is still here. How many millions of aliens have we in this country who have not been and cannot be sent out? No one is trying to send them out. I do not want to send these persons out, but I do not want to vote to give them the privilege of becoming American citizens instanter? Most of this class has never shown any inclination to want to become American citizens, and never did until the arm of the law reached out and got them and was ready to send them back to their own countries. Then someone interposes and says, "Let us not send them back because it would work a hardship." There never was a case where an American-born man went to jail in the United States from the days of George Washington down to now where it did not work a hardship on someone. What is the use of our shedding tears about these persons who come in here illegally, violating the laws knowingly, and then confess to it? I ask those of you who have been restrictionists and have stood up in defense of the restrictive immigration laws of this country to vote for this amendment. This is the day for you to stand up and vote for my amendment to strike out this title, and we will take care of the cases of these persons who came in illegally and who have wives who came in illegally. We are not going to deport them under this amendment, but we are going to straighten the matter out. After they stay here a few years and obey the laws, then, if they behave themselves, the limitations will run in their favor and they can stay. No one wants to deport them under this motion. We are not trying to work any hardship on them. The people who work a hardship on them are the people who come here with these bills and ask that we give these persons more rights than they ought to have.

That is the proposition, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that everyone here will take a position on this and vote as I have indicated, because that is what it means.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. The gentleman does not believe the Bill of Rights protects these persons, as is contended by some organizations recently having this matter under discussion?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I may say to my good friend that I have never seen anyone in this country who deserved to be protected by the Bill of Rights that the Bill of Rights did not protect. The Bill of Rights protects everybody.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I want to corroborate what the gentleman has said about the Immigration Committee not having heard these cases this year.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And the gentleman is a member of the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. They railroaded this stuff over here and we did not get a chance to consider it. As a member of the Committee on Immigration I am against this and I want to vote to protect American citizenship. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman has expressed a most eloquent support of my amendment and I appreciate it for it comes from a man who knows what he is talking about. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a misstatement of facts made, we have had a demonstration of that twice by my good friend from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman mean to say I stated something that is not true?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Just wait a minute and I will explain what I mean.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will be glad to wait.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman told this House these people could not be deported. I say to this House that these people can be deported because they were not in this country prior to 1924. If you will look at the bills you will find that in these particular cases they came here in 1926. Therefore you could deport each one of them, and you are going to separate each one of them from an American wife and maybe three or four American children.

Mr. MAY and Mr. ZIMMERMAN rose.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I cannot yield now because I want to complete my statement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the next question, namely, that these bills were railroaded, I challenge that statement because these bills were acted upon by the last Congress, voted upon by the membership of the last Congress by 3 to 1. The only reason we could not dispose of them during last Congress was the adjournment of the Congress. The bills were reintroduced by various Members of the House in this Congress.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In one moment.

I am not a bit concerned about what the House does on any of these bills, but when the bills were introduced, in order not to drag all these women and children back for another hearing such as we had last year when we brought them from all sections of the country to hear them, we submitted the reports and the evidence to the new Members, and they had an opportunity, under the rules of the committee and under the understanding then had, to file a minority report. No one took advantage of anybody, and the matter was right open for everyone to look at.

Now, if you are prepared to say that, if a man has been in this country 13 years and did not come here as a result of fraud, but came here because we had a bad consul in Germany who issued false certificates and false visas, he should be deported, you must bear in mind that these people were not responsible for the false visas that they obtained from the consul. It was our own consul, the American consul, who gave them these visas. How he did it, I do not know, and for your information, I have been informed that the gentleman has committed suicide because the things he had done way back in 1926 were discovered.

Now, are you prepared to destroy such a man who has a family of 3 or 4 American children and an American wife?

Are you prepared to send him back, and I submit to you, in all fairness and honesty, these people can now be deported because they did not come in here prior to July 1, 1924.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. For a very brief question; yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. The gentleman said they had an American wife. Which one are you talking about that has an American wife? Is the gentleman talking about the first one?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I am talking about all the bills on the calendar. I am not referring to any particular bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I ask the gentleman to name the one we are considering in connection with this calendar who has an American wife.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There are some fifty-odd bills here, and I may say, Mr. Speaker, out of a total of 200 bills last year, the committee unanimously reported about 54 or 60 bills. We have been very careful in all of these matters. We have not let any case come up here that we believed was not entitled to admission. This is not an immigration problem. These people are in this country now. How are you going to get them out?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio and Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have just a few minutes; I am sorry, I cannot yield.

Now, some of the countries to which they would be subject to deportation are no longer in existence; some of them are. Are you prepared to turn around and to take a man who is the head of a family, who has never been on relief, who has supported his people, who goes to church and gives to charity and works hard to keep his family and educate his children—are you prepared to agree to an amendment that will say to this man, "We will separate you from your wife; you have been here 13 or 14 years and we will separate you from your family and you never can come back and rejoin your family."

I say this is wrong. I think there is a great hysteria being created here which certain Members are using to build up a case of alien prejudices and alien hatreds. That is what we have to contend with in this Congress—at least with some of the Members who preach the doctrine of hate and intolerance. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the preferential motion.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I understand that a motion is now pending offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is an amendment pending, but the gentleman from Louisiana states that he offers a preferential motion, which the Clerk will report. The Chair can then rule upon its character of preference.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana moves that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to take issue with my colleagues on the Immigration Committee. They are splendid gentlemen and a splendid lady, and I have the highest regard for each member of that committee. I have a high regard for the able chairman of that committee, but this evening we are facing something that transcends any personality whatsoever. The committee has reported out this bill, not by any means with the full approval of all of the members, but this evening we are asked to place our stamp of approval upon rank fraud. The chairman of the committee has told you that you would be guilty of separating some man from his wife. I asked him to name the one who would be separated from his wife. Let me read right here from the report from title I:

The wife of this alien was also a resident of Austria, a part of which later became the territory of Italy. She had known her alien husband in their native land and they had been sweethearts.

She was imported into this country. Take all of these bills, and in almost every one of them you will find fraud. Aliens have come here by going into cemeteries and copying some facts from tombstones and in every other conceivable way. American citizenship is at stake here this evening.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. Does the gentleman feel that the children could be deported?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. There is not any question of deporting children here.

Mr. WALTER. But we are either going to deport the children or separate the family.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. There is no question of separation of families. In the first place, both of them came here from foreign countries, and I think if you will go through these bills, you will find that in many of them the husband and wife came from foreign countries. I was born and reared in the good old Southland, and I have always believed that a fellow who made his bed had to lie on it, and if any wrong has been perpetrated, these people perpetrated it themselves.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to correct the gentleman. In the first bill there are two native American-born children, a fine family, reared in good surroundings, and the gentleman wants to separate that father and send him away so that he can never come back.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. And I say that you do not have to separate them. If the father and mother both came from Europe, let them go back and take with them their progeny which was produced in this country.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Why should an American-born child be taken back to Europe, why should they not have rights of their own? Merely because their father and mother, decent, respectable citizens, happen to come in here illegally, when they were as good citizens as they could be——

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Decent respectable citizens when the record shows that they came here by perpetrating fraud. The record shows that they came in perpetrating fraud in the land, and then the gentleman calls them decent American citizens! What price are we going to pay for American citizenship? Are we going to make it mean something, or are we going to place our stamp of approval on fraud? We would not tolerate that in our courts.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. No; I am sorry but I do not have time. Everybody knows that in our courts we do not stand for fraud. We do not countenance fraud. We frown upon it, and we say to our children that they should not tolerate it. We say that when a man comes into this country he ought to have principles and he ought to stand by those principles, and when a man comes here by fraud and we permit it and approve it by our vote we vitiate everything that we stand for.

I place a high value upon American citizenship. We want to let the world know that it cannot be acquired by fraud, subterfuge, and chicanery. Let us announce to all those who seek the haven of the Stars and Stripes that they must come with clean hands.

Every time one of these bills comes up—and there are dozens of them—somebody is always ready to plead for sympathy. The plea is made that it is a hardship case, or some other human appeal is made. But who created this situation? Did I? Did you? Did Congress? No. In most cases it was caused by the conniving of the very person who seeks relief and comes here and asks Congress to whitewash his or her misdeeds. No one has more sympathy than I have. "The milk of human kindness" is a precious possession of mine. But I do not propose to let my sympathies overrun my judgment. Sympathy will not lead me to clothe with righteousness that which is called fraud both by Holy Writ and the law of the land. For instance, in this very bill the report itself shows that one entered as a seaman and then it continues:

The evidence disclosed that the seaman's papers and the photograph were not the papers or photograph of this alien.

That in our language is fraud. In the next report, the one on Silver, the report states that he changed his name from Feldman to Silver in order to assist his entry. And so on, gentlemen.

As a member of the Immigration Committee of the House, I cannot approve such. When the news gets back to Europe—and it will get back—that you cannot get by over here by these schemes, it will certainly retard the flow of Europe's hordes to our shores. I am doing my dead level best to protect our land, our homes, and our institutions, and I hope you will support this motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion. My distinguished friend, a member of the committee, has challenged me to give you one case where there are American children. I take the very first case, with two fine American children, grown up in an American atmosphere. There are only 50 bills in all. The admission of these people will not harm this country. These men have not committed any crime, and of all the cases, not one was ever on relief.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let me develop my thought, and then I shall yield to the gentleman. In not one of these cases were the people on relief nor did they ask for charity. In about 35 percent of these cases they are all in business, supporting their families, supporting their church and their community. They are of all races and religions. This is no particular group of people.

As I said before, in all of these fraud cases the immigrants themselves were not guilty of that fraud. Some of our own steamship companies in foreign countries, which received money from them, told them they could get them a visa, and the steamship companies got the visas through an American consul in 1925 and 1926 and gave them those documents with the understanding that they had a right to come to the United States and become citizens. How did the Department get those people? How did they pick them up? All of these people who believed they were legally in the country got married legally and openly. They applied for citizenship papers, and when they were asked when they entered the country, they presented their visas which were issued during that very period, 1925 or 1926, by the consul who was in collusion with the steamship companies. These men and women were simply the victims of circumstances, without committing any crime. Now they have been here 13 years. In 99 percent of these 54 or 51 cases they are all married to American women. They have American families. Where are you going to send them? What are you going to do with their American families? I submit to this House that those people can be deported today if the warrant is enforced, because they came here after July 1, 1924. Under our immigration law an alien can be deported at any time after July 1, 1924, and there is not one case in this group that was prior to 1924.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Does not the gentleman think that some of the opposition to this bill is based more on fanaticism than on reason?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman can answer that for himself, because there has never been a time when I have come here with a bill that there was not somebody to make objections. There was objection made even to a bill concerning a woman born in Georgia who did not know she had surrendered her citizenship when she signed a certain property settlement when she married a Frenchman. When she discovered that, she naturally took steps immediately to repatriate herself. Now, was there anything wrong in doing that? We found a quorum on the floor, however, to object to it. Such unreasonable objections have occurred year in and year out.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Have any of these 50 people ever been convicted of any crime?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] suggested that these people take the children back to the country of nativity of the mother and father. Of course, those children are entitled to the same privileges in this country as the gentleman's own children. As far as they are concerned they have the same birthright.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I believe the gentleman from Louisiana is sincere in his fight as a restrictionist. But he had an opportunity to go through these bills. We supplied him with the reports. We supplied him with the evidence. He could have filed a minority report, which he did not do. I do not question the gentleman's integrity.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly, I yield. I do not question the gentleman's integrity.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I know the gentleman does not question my integrity, but he questions what I say. The records show that they came in here under false names. I am going by the records.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree to that. There is no question about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LANHAM). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I notice this bill has four titles. Up to this time we have only been dealing with one title, but I take it the motion to strike out the enacting clause will strike out the enacting clause for the entire bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, that would not be in opposition to my amendment, except that it would strike this whole bill out, and then it could go back to the Committee on Immigration, if necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The adoption of the pending preferential motion would strike out the enacting clause with reference to the omnibus bill and the various individual bills contained therein.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is agreed to, then that kills this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] has offered a preferential motion to strike out the enacting clause. If that motion is adopted, then there would be no further consideration of the bill. It would apply to all titles enumerated in the bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If that motion is not adopted, then what will be the procedure?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman's motion is not adopted, the next procedure would be to vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] to strike out title I of the bill.

The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DICKSTEIN) there were—ayes 95, noes 53.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, nays 121, not voting 91, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LANHAM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, in view of the situation that has developed in regard to the first omnibus immigration bill, it appears to be the wiser procedure to discontinue the call of the omnibus bills at this time. There happen to be in some of these omnibus bills certain individual titles which are not in the same category with those that have just been considered. Occasionally the person in one of the bills is without fraud whatsoever. In view of the fact that one such bill is grouped with other bills with which fraud is connected, I believe it would be wiser not to consider those bills at this time, because I fear that some innocent victims would be made to suffer along with those who did commit fraud and who are not entitled to the leniency that has been suggested. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the Private Calendar be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein a discussion between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] and Senator TAFT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

CARL RAYMOND GRAY

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, some time during the night of May 8, here in the Nation's Capital, there passed to his eternal reward one of America's distinguished citizens, Carl Raymond Gray. He was born in Princeton, Ark., on September 28, 1867, the son of the late Col. Oliver C. Gray and Mrs. Virginia Davis Gray.

At the time of his death Mr. Gray was in Washington in connection with pending railroad legislation, having served as chairman of an unofficial railway legislation board of executives and union leaders who made a report to President Roosevelt last December. Mr. Gray served this Government on other occasions, but most conspicuously as the Director of Operations in the United States Railroad Administration from January 5, 1918, to January 15, 1919. This service involved the operations of all the railroads of the United States in the World War period. This assignment imposed upon Mr. Gray the problem of meeting the Nation's usual peacetime transportation needs, and, in addition, directing the shipping of supplies and munitions for all the allied countries, as well as moving of the Nation's troops and their equipment and supplies to ports of embarkation to Europe.

The following is a brief sketch of the life of Carl Gray, whose life was devoted almost wholly to the railroad industry. He began his railroad service in his sixteenth year as a volunteer assistant to a station "helper" on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, learned telegraphy from the station operator, became a telegraph operator and station agent, and advanced through many positions in the traffic and operating departments of that railroad to become its senior vice president, 1909–11. He was president of the Spokane, Portland & Seattle and Oregon Electric Railways, 1911–12; president of the Great Northern Railway Co., 1912–14; and president of the Western Maryland Railway Co., 1914–18, serving also for a part of a year, 1917–18, as chairman of the board of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railway Co. On January 1, 1920, he became president of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and its system companies, and operated that railroad system until October 1, 1937, when he voluntarily retired from the presidency under the retirement rule of the company. But his valued experience and qualifications were retained by the Union Pacific system by his election as vice chairman of the board of directors. He was one of the Committee of Six, representing railroad management and railroad labor, appointed by President Roosevelt late in 1938 to recommend legislation for the solution of the existing railroad problem, which committee made its report and recommendations in December last, constituting the basis of railroad bills now pending before both the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Upon his retirement as president of the Union Pacific, Mr. Gray moved to New York City after living many years in Omaha, Nebr. Surviving are his widow and three sons: Carl R. Gray, Jr.; Howard K. Gray, M. D.; and Russell D. Gray. Two of his sons are railroad executives, and the other is at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. It was Dr. Gray who successfully operated upon James Roosevelt, the son of our President.

Mr. Gray wore his many honors with great modesty and performed the tasks assigned to him with singular success. He was able to settle many controversies affecting the railroad industry, because labor recognized his fairness and sympathetic understanding of their problems and the officials of our Government, including the President, as well as leaders of industry, relied upon his judgment. Mr. Gray brought to the council table in matters affecting labor and industry a knowledge of working conditions and appreciation of the worker's position, which made him valuable as a mediator. This knowledge was gained by actually performing every task connected with the running of a railroad, as contrasted with the theories and the book knowledge of so many of our lawmakers and administrative officials.

During recent years it was my privilege to know Mr. Gray, and during our frequent meetings in the committee room of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of this House where he often appeared as a witness on pending railroad legislation, I was impressed with his sincerity and willingness to cooperate with Congress in solving the involved questions affecting the transportation industry.

It is fitting that we should render the official tribute of respect, but the significance of this occasion is far deeper than that. Ungrateful republics cannot endure, and as a slight token of appreciation for his service to humanity, to industry, and to his Government this Congress does well to record in permanent form a statement on the life and character of Carl Raymond Gray.

It was not a long life, and yet to go back to its beginning is to enter another world, to recall persons and events, governments, standards, and problems belonging to an epoch now definitely closed. When Carl R. Gray was born on September 28, 1867, this country was still sorrowing at the irreparable loss of the martyred Lincoln. In England, the long career of Palmerston was drawing to a close, and the first ministry of Gladstone had not yet started. In France, Napoleon III was endeavoring to conceal the decadence of the Empire with a fatuous splendor. In Italy, Cavour had been laying the foundation of Italian unity, but the essential successes of Victor Emanuel were not yet recognized. In Germany, Bismarck was in the midst of his victories of Sadowa and Sedan, and with relentless will was forging the mechanism of German imperial power. In our country, the first transcontinental railroad had not yet been completed.

Within the period of 53 years between his birth and election to the presidency of the Union Pacific Railroad the population of continental United States had risen from 35,000,000 to 106,000,000. The deep wounds left by the War between the States had been healed, and the Nation with the indomitable enthusiasm of a new and abiding sense of unity, solving one problem after another, superior to the strife of politics, the conspiracies of greed, and the assaults of unreason, had steadily advanced to a prosperity and power such as a free people had never known before, and at its highest point of achievement and privilege had been able to bring its resources to the rescue of liberty itself.

For in this same period old rivalries and conflicting interests had lavishly sown the seeds of conflict in Europe, and the opportunities won by science and industry, ready to bless the millions of toilers with an orderly progress, were made to serve an unsatiable lust for power, until in titanic struggle Europe was strewn with human wreckage, and now, with Romanoffs, Hapsburgs, and Hohenzollerns dethroned, amid economic disasters still unretrieved and hatreds still unquenched, with democracy saved but not assured, with many gloomy forebodings and yet with potency and promise of vigorous and industrious peoples, is still seeking earnestly readjustments, stability, and peace. A period had closed from which mankind will hereafter make its reckonings. It was at this period of transition that Carl R. Gray was elected as head of the Union Pacific Railroad. He was equipped for his task by inheritance and training, which were completely and typically American. He was neither helped nor hampered by exceptional environment. He suffered neither from poverty nor from riches. His endowment was a keen mind and a strong body. Alert to opportunity, self-reliant, facile, and warm-hearted, he made his own way, owing his success to his tireless persistence and his unquenchable ardor in living. He belonged to the aristocracy of the plain people of this country.

It was Macaulay who said that if one stopped under a doorway for a moment with Edmund Burke to escape a shower he would be impressed with the certainty that he had met a kindly man. That was equally true of Mr. Gray.

He was a strong partisan, but never permitted his loyalty to his business to interfere with his duty to his country. He believed intensely in his own side of an argument, but he was tolerant of opposition, and ever ready to applaud in an adversary that ability and character which bespeaks conviction and denotes sincerity.

May the Lord deal with him as one who has gained the palm and may his place in the world beyond the grave be even higher and more glorious than that which he won for himself among men.

Haec olim meminisse juvabit.

THE WORKERS' ALLIANCE OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD, and to include therein a letter from a prominent citizen of California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, so much has been said these days about the Workers' Alliance on this floor and throughout the Nation in some of the press that is uncomplimentary, that I wish at this time to insert into the RECORD an open letter to all State legislators of the State of California. This letter is from the president of the State executive board of the Workers' Alliance of the State of California. Let us not forget that even though there are attempts by some to cloud the issue of adequate relief, there are always two sides to every question. It is hoped that this House will not blindly follow the lead of a few who would take us on a witch hunting expedition. I hope this letter will be read by each as though he were the unfortunate one who finds himself numbered among the unemployed.

The letter follows:

WORKERS ALLIANCE OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, Calif., April 26, 1939.

An open letter to all State legislators, with copies to the press, Governor Olson, President Roosevelt, Lieutenant Governor Patterson, and all California trade unions

Gentlemen of the California State Legislature:

The Workers Alliance of California deems it necessary at this time to address itself to every member of both houses of our State legislature, relative to certain accusations, attributed to members of the legislature, against this organization in connection with the fact that alliance members, in committees, attempted as constituents to contact certain legislators over the week end at their homes, for the purpose of petitioning them on certain legitimate and legislative political issues.

We wish to state emphatically that we consider it a constitutional right for any one or more, constituents to petition his, her, or their legislative representatives with their grievances, or in protest against actions considered not in the best interest of the constitutents. It was this right that was exercised by members of the alliance, and constituents of the legislators, whom they attempted to visit.

Several members of our assembly and senate, representing themselves as "economy-minded legislators * * * to eliminate waste and extravagance * * ," in a telegram to the Los Angeles County sheriff, made the accusation that the Workers' Alliance had conducted raids, using "cowardly and un-American tactics employing threats upon helpless women and children." Senator ——— made similar accusations such as " * * representatives of the Workers' Alliance * * * in most despicable and cowardly manner, created violent disturbances before the homes of absent legislators and terrorized defenseless women and children by threats."

The Workers' Alliance emphatically denies these accusations, and we demand to know whose homes were raided. Whose helpless women and children were threatened? Where were there any violent disturbances and who was terrorized? Every one of the committees or delegations making such visits were peaceful in their approach, and left without making the slightest disturbance, and neither did they threaten or terrorize any women or children.

Do any of these gentlemen feel that they are above reproach from their constituents? We believe they do. In fact, you have only to note the statement of Assemblyman ———, while discussing the repeal of the criminal syndicalism law, who stated: "But when you find 'red' marchers surrounding the homes of legislators who stand on their right to think and vote as they please, it is time to challenge them."

This statement that legislators stand on their right to vote as they please is indicative, and, more than anything else, justifies our protests against their flouting the will of the people as expressed in the November elections by the overwhelming vote for the Olson administration and its democratic platform.

When people wish to petition their assemblymen, ——— threatens to give them a load of buckshot. This is typical of the unethical procedure in progress in our State assembly and senate by certain legislators ever since the beginning of the legislature in January. ——— also stated that he was no "red" baiter, but proved to be the worst "red" baiter of all, and behind his "red" baiting he attempts to justify his vote against repeal of the criminal syndicalism law, as did others.

Senator ——— speaks about the orderly processes of law and government for all the people and not a selfish minority, created by our forefathers. But we ask these gentlemen the frank question—and we would appreciate an answer—If you believe our forefathers were correct in establishing a government for the majority of the people and not for a selfish minority, then why do you demand the right to vote as you please and challenge the will of the vast majority of our citizens, who voted for a new deal for the unemployed, as indicated in the Democratic platform, and continue your support of selfish interests in this State as against the will of the majority?

We feel also that it is very unfair for Senator ——— to say that we lack patience and understanding. Who has been more patient, suffering an intolerable life, because they are denied the right to a job, whose very existence is continually threatened by so-called economy-minded legislators, in both our own State legislature and the National Congress, than have the unemployed, who, for going on 10 long years now, have been the victims of mass unemployment in a country abounding in plenty for all?

Who should have any more right to be impatient than unemployed people who see their representatives flout the will of the people, and who bring about a condition whereby their already miserable standards are cut even lower? The responsibility is yours, gentlemen of the legislature, who are attempting to cover up your crude policies and services to minority selfish interests behind this attack on the unemployed.

If initiative and recall are democratic means, then so is the right to petition any one or all of our legislators with our grievances. The Workers' Alliance and its members yield to no one as to loyalty to our democratic forms and institutions, and the patience displayed by the unemployed for this past 10 years is sufficient proof of it.

Certain gentlemen in our legislature who are much concerned about the "audacity" of people petitioning them at their homes, seem to overlook the fact that the unemployed have so-called homes which are actually invaded day after day. Their homes are invaded by relief snoopers who demand that the unemployed subject themselves to the most humiliating investigations, when demands are made for full particulars as to our life's history, demanding past rent receipts, references, and records to show where we spent our last few pennies.

This brings us again to the question of women and children being threatened and terrorized. It is not the wives and children of legislators, but it is the wives and children of the unemployed who are terrorized and threatened. As a result of economy-minded legislators' actions, helpless women and children will be denied medical care which may mean acute suffering and even death. This will happen, not from threats but from the actualities of certain legislators' policies.

Who is terrorizing women and children? Is it not those in our legislature who are responsible for the denial to helpless women and children of medical care, the denial of sufficient rent to prevent evictions into the streets, the denial of sufficient food to keep children and mothers sufficiently nourished, denial of shoes and clothing for children that will force many of them to stay away from school?

Then in the face of these facts, Mr. ——— states, "We protest cowardly and un-American tactics in employing threats upon helpless women and children." Who is cowardly, Mr. ———? Who is un-American? Who threatens helpless women and children? Who threatens whom? Who are enforcing these crimes upon helpless women and children, and then protest when they are called upon to face their victims, and with threats of investigations and high-sounding "patriotic" phrases attempt to silence and still the voices of these helpless women and children whose lives they are hacking with an "economy" ax?

The Workers' Alliance cannot take very seriously such statements as Senator ——— is quoted in the press to have made, that "When they have selected leaders of responsibility they may rest assured the Legislature of California will listen intently to their complaints." The complaints, Mr. ———, were embodied in the Democratic platform, and were endorsed by an overwhelming majority of the citizens of California. Have these complaints been trammeled on and ignored, Mr. ———, only because of the leadership that the unemployed have chosen to defend their interests?

Mr. ——— states that, "To those who have been misled by irresponsible leadership that is apparent in the Workers' Alliance, that they seek other means of expressing their desires and wishes in the matter of relief." Let us again remind Mr. ——— that other means were utilized in no uncertain terms, good old American means, through the American ballot, in the last election, and it is no other than Mr. ——— and the "economy" minded in our legislature who has refused to recognize that election mandate.

The Workers' Alliance and its program is an open book, and we welcome any honest investigation; but we are opposed to witch-hunting investigations that are utilized to blur the eyes of the public and attempt to throw up a smoke screen, behind which these gentlemen "will vote as they please" and ignore the democratic will of the people, threaten and terrorize helpless women and children with the actualities of denying them medical care, food, homes, shoes, and clothing.

Respectfully,

ALEX NORAL,
President, State Executive Board,
Workers' Alliance of California.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein a radio address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], on the subject Federal Aid to Education.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement from the Works Progress Administrator with reference to an article that appeared recently in a certain magazine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein a statement by Mr. Rex Floyd, of the staff of the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the Philippine economic situation and to include therein certain excerpts from a book written by Major Anderson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the American Metal Market on the silver question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point with reference to the immigration bills which have just been considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the action of the House this afternoon in striking out the enacting clause of H. R. 6182, a bill to cancel the warrants of deportation issued against certain aliens for fraudulent entry into the United States and legalizing their entry, indicates the need of general legislation to cover the cases of several thousand aliens unlawfully in the United States but who cannot be deported to any country in the world or who cannot be deported without undue hardship to them and their families.

If the Committee on Immigration intends to bring in individual bills for each of such aliens, the last of them cannot be disposed of during the lifetime of the aliens affected, unless we change our private calendar procedure and devote several months entirely to the consideration of such bills. Judging by the temper of the House today it is doubtful even then how many bills of this type would be passed.

There are 12 omnibus bills reported from the Immigration Committee on today's calendar, each one affecting 4 or 5 aliens. One has just been defeated but the other 11 remain on the calendar and will be taken up on the third Tuesday in June if the regular procedure is followed.

I want to call attention to the fact that a number of the items in these bills are clearly meritorious and do not involve any fraud or illegality. It is wrong and unfair to defeat these bills by the wholesale. Each item should be considered by the membership and passed or defeated on its own merits.

The bills on the calendar today have been on the Private Calendars for several years. Most of us who are assigned to the work of the Private Calendar are in agreement that they ought to be passed but with an amendment similar to the one offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] this afternoon.

All of the aliens mentioned in today's bills, although illegally in the United States, have been law-abiding, hard-working, and self-respecting people since their arrival among us. In most instances they have resided here for 10 or 12 years, they are married to American citizens, and have American-born children. Some of them cannot be deported because their native countries will not admit them, to deport others would subject them to the loss of all they have accumulated and to imprisonment and perhaps death in their native lands, and in practically every case it would mean the separation of a father or a mother from his or her family. We cannot be that cruel.

On the other hand, it is our duty as Representatives in Congress to protect the integrity of our laws and the dignity of American citizenship. Most of these bills contain a clause that fraudulent entry shall be deemed lawful for permanent residence and that petitions for citizenship based on fraudulent entry shall be held valid. It seems to me that such a proposition is preposterous. We ought not to reward those who have deliberately flaunted and violated our immigration laws with the honor of American citizenship, with all the rights and privileges and protection that goes with it. We owe it to ourselves and to the many thousands of naturalized citizens who entered this country honestly after years of waiting and saving to refuse citizenship to the aliens who came here through perjury, bribery, and corruption. If we permit them to stay among us it is generosity enough.

Mr. O'TOOLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

LESTER P. BARLOW

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on War Claims be discharged from consideration of the bill (S. 313) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Lester P. Barlow against the United States, and that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMERICAN SUGAR INDUSTRY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] for 45 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables prepared by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I addressed the House on Wednesday, May 10, regarding a recent event that marked another significant action of the Department of Agriculture indicating its continued hostility to the American sugar-beet industry, particularly that part of it located in the eastern growing area composed of the States of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and Wisconsin. That action was the unfair allocation of sugar-sales quotas by the Secretary of Agriculture.

In view of the many new Members of this House who may be unfamiliar with the American sugar industry and its vital importance to every citizen of this country, it seems to me that now is an appropriate time to review the history of the New Deal administration in its relation to sugar-control legislation.

It occurs to me also that the statement of the President of the United States in his message to Congress dated February 8, 1934, dealing with the sugar situation, presaging, as it did, what the policy was to be in connection with this important agricultural activity, should at this time be reviewed. Mr. Roosevelt, in discussing the domestic sugar industry, said in part, "I do not at this time recommend placing sugar on the free list."

In a speech in the House of Representatives on Monday, February 26, 1934, I quoted the President and indicated I was apprehensive of what the policy of the administration toward the sugar industry was in the future to be.

Mr. A. J. S. Weaver, the then Chief of the Sugar Section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, in his testimony before the House Committee on Agriculture on February 19, 1934, indicated very clearly he considered this expression of the President to be an intimation that sugar might "later be put on the free list by a succession of moves which would reduce the great shock."

On February 20, 1934, Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, in his testimony before the House Committee on Agriculture, made the statement, in effect, that he "would not extend protection to any industry that could not stand on its own two feet." As any industry which could stand on its own two feet would not need protection, and assuming that, of course, Mr. Tugwell reflected the views of his superior, it is obvious that the adoption of the policy of the present Secretary of Agriculture at that time would have destroyed the whole protective tariff system and placed this country on a free-trade basis with the other countries of the world.

The Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. Henry A. Wallace, was quoted publicly as stating he believed the American sugar industry was "a hothouse industry and should never have been established." Later, before a Senate committee, Mr. Wallace was quoted as stating the industry should be eliminated, and he added, "but it is not politically possible to do this at this time."

In an article entitled "America Must Choose," published at about that time, the Secretary of Agriculture, in discussing a program for the rehabilitation of agriculture and industry, declared:

> This will involve a radical reduction in tariffs that might seriously hurt certain industries and a few kinds of agricultural businesses, such as sugar-beet growing and flax growing. It might also cause pain for a while to wool growers and to farmers who supply material for various edible oils. I think we ought to face that fact.
> Now, if we are going to lower tariffs radically, there may have to be definite planning whereby certain industries or businesses will have to be retired. The Government might have to help furnish means for the orderly retirement of such businesses and even select those which are thus to be retired.

Mr. Speaker, the order of President Roosevelt instructing the Navy Department to accept the Argentina bid for canned beef for the Navy, given to the press on Friday last, has very properly aroused the resentment of every producer of beef in the United States. In attempted justification of his strange order, the President was quoted as stating that Argentina beef was "cheaper and infinitely better than the American product."

Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hull, through the medium of the reciprocal trade agreement policy, are constantly seeking to extend our markets in foreign countries, particularly for agricultural products. In view of the amazing and questionable statement that Argentina beef is "infinitely better than the American product," I would be interested in learning just how far and to what extent Mr. Roosevelt expects to increase our foreign market for our beef products when he has informed the world that Argentina beef is so much superior and so much cheaper than our American product that even the United States Government buys that product in preference to our own.

It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that the action of the President is consistent with the attitude of Messrs. Weaver, Tugwell, and Wallace, whom I have just quoted, and confirms my long-established opinion that they were then speaking the mind of the President.

It is my opinion that the President's statement constitutes a surrender to Argentina of what remains of our foreign market for beef. It is quite in keeping with our cotton-control policy, the inauguration of which constituted due notice to other cotton-producing countries that we were thereby surrendering our foreign market for that product and they could help themselves to it, which they promptly proceeded to do, with the result that the larger portion of our foreign market for this important product is gone forever and we are now faced by the necessity of either permanently taking millions of southern acres out of cultivation or using them to produce other products in competition with the farmers of Michigan and elsewhere.

In view of the amazing and unprecedented statement of Mr. Roosevelt regarding Argentina beef one cannot help but ponder the significance of the last sentence of Secretary Wallace, which I have quoted, to the effect "the Government might have to help furnish means for the orderly retirement of such businesses and even select those which are thus to be retired," and wonder whether beef production in this country is among "those to be retired."

The attitude of mind displayed by the three subordinates of the President, whom I have quoted, must have been fully approved by the President, and is typical of the administration's attitude toward the American sugar-beet industry which has since governed the actions of those in the Sugar Control Section.

Mr. Speaker, when this administration assumed office on March 4, 1933, there were 16 beet-sugar refining plants in the State of Michigan. Today we find one of those plants dismantled and two others idle. In fact, in my home city of Bay City there were three of these refineries in 1938. They had been profitably refining beet sugar for many years. Today only one of the three continues to operate, one having been dismantled and the other closed. The one plant in Indiana continues to operate. Of the five refineries in Ohio, four only continue to operate. Of the three in Wisconsin, the one at Green Bay continues to operate, the one at Chippewa Falls is dismantled. The one at Janesville is idle.

Mr. Speaker, continental United States supplies less than 30 percent of the sugar consumed by the people living in continental United States. Particularly in view of the situation which faces agriculture, and the surpluses of various other agricultural commodities which confront us each year, it would seem the height of wisdom that, instead of circumscribing or strangling an agricultural activity which supplies only 30 percent of our needs, the administration would instead extend every possible encouragement to a development, an expansion of the same, in order to put to profitable work lands either now idle or producing nonprofitable crops.

That the raising of sugar beets is a profitable undertaking is known in every beet-raising community. It is a well-known fact that the profits from this product have paid more farm mortgages than any other two farm products raised in beet communities. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the sugar beet is the only farm commodity in the State of Michigan upon which the farmer can safely count a profit when he plants his seed.

Why is it that the demands of certain powerful interests in this country and certain peoples alien to this country are given greater consideration than is given our own American citizens? In asking this question I have in mind particularly the preferential status extended to Cuban sugar and to those who own the sugar activities of that island. Is it because hundreds of millions of dollars have been invested in Cuban sugar plantations, railroads, and mills by a little group of eastern financiers? Is it because this little group of Wall Street bankers now control practically all of the sugar activities of the island of Cuba? Is it a desire to protect American capital invested in foreign lands in preference to protecting American capital invested in this country?

Under what concept of fair and just government can the American farmers who grow sugar beets, and who can grow enough sugar beets to supply the entire domestic demand for sugar if necessary, the American capital invested in sugar production in this country, the American consumers, and the whole body of our people be asked to lay aside their rights to indulge to their fullest capacity the growing and refining of a product so necessary to the American people?

Mr. Speaker, in order to understand how important the domestic sugar industry is to many other lines of commercial and industrial activities, one must have a picture of the commercial avenues through which radiates the money spent for domestic sugar. I do not have at hand the detailed figures for the areas outside of Michigan. However, in that State in 1938 we produced 340,223,000 pounds of beet sugar. Beets were grown on 17,648 farms of the State, and 17,000 wage earners gained a livelihood through work in the beet fields. The following tabulations will give some idea of the magnitude of the Michigan beet-sugar industry, its importance to Michigan farmers and wage earners, and its consumption of materials and services in relation to other industries:

Acreage and production figures, 1938–39 campaign

Acres planted	140,665
Tons of beets harvested	1,120,816
100-pound bags of refined sugar produced	3,402,230
Estimated amount farmers will receive for 1938 beets, including Government payment; total	$9,166,528
Estimated value of sugar, pulp, and molasses produced	$14,000,000

Community benefits

Taxes paid	$1,605,324
Insurance	$112,595

Business given interrelated industries, 1938

Transportation of beets, sugar, and supplies	$1,847,655
Coal used (tons)	155,287
Fuel oil used (gallons)	6,546,454
Coke used (tons)	9,678
Lime rock used (do)	97,007
Filter cloth used	$29,593
Laboratory supplies used	4,763
Lubricating oil, grease, etc., used	17,369
Sugar and pulp bags used	553,751
Boiler tubes used	12,915
Nonferrous tubes used	1,723
Sulfur used	13,238
Heavy chemicals used	33,241
Filter aids used	25,836
Refractories used	15,180
Valves, pipes, fittings used	35,357
Slicer knives used	12,694
Sewing thread used	4,486
Miscellaneous supplies for factory operation	85,531
Miscellaneous supplies for factory repair	198,667
New equipment and new construction	341,012

In order to realize the relative value of the sugar beet as a farm crop, it is necessary to compare the farm value per acre with other crops grown on Michigan farms. The figures which follow are those for the year 1938:

Farm value per acre

Sugar beets [1]	$66.88
Potatoes	66.00
Field peas	21.00
Field beans [2]	19.11
Corn	18.98
Flaxseed	14.04
Alfalfa hay	13.36
Barley	13.20
Soybeans	12.80
Winter wheat	12.68
Oats	9.45
Alfalfa seed	9.10
Spring wheat	9.00
All tame hay	8.82
Clover seed	8.80
Buckwheat	6.75
Rye	5.54
Wild hay	3.66

[1] Preliminary, including Federal sugar payment.

[2] Based on price of clean beans applied to production of cleaned beans.

President Roosevelt in his message heretofore referred to made it clear that he believes the administration's program regarding sugar would result in a saving to the American sugar consumer. When this position was taken by the Chief Executive it seemed very clear that the program he had in mind was one of total elimination of the sugar-beet industry in this country.

Mr. Speaker, the housewives of the Nation have had the experience of finding themselves at the mercy of the interests which produce offshore sugar. Millions of housewives will remember that in 1920 when the available domestic sugar had been sold and was off the market, and when the offshore producer was in a position to dictate the price, that those housewives paid as high as 32 cents per pound for this necessary food product, the price promptly dropping when the domestic sugar again came on the market in competition with foreign sugar.

The American consumer is also the American taxpayer. To him the great concern expressed for the consumers by the President in his message was evidently not extended in the same degree in the Presidential mind. This is indicated by the fact that President Roosevelt, under power granted him in the flexible clause in the Tariff Act, together with the powers granted under the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, has reduced the tariff on Cuban sugar from 2 cents to nine-tenths of a cent a pound. A further reduction of 15 cents per 100 pounds appears imminent. A mere statement of this reduction in the tariff on sugar does not appear to be particularly startling, but if one will realize that the present reduction of 1.1 cents per pound in the tariff on Cuban sugar means each year a loss of revenue to the Treasury of the United States of approximately $45,000,000—and this may be increased to $56,000,000 by a further, and at this time contemplated, reduction in the tariff—and if one will further realize that this reduction in the tariff does not contribute substantially to the welfare of the Cuban peons, but does contribute very largely to the further enrichment of those powerful Wall Street figures who own and control the Cuban sugar activities, and will still further realize that this reduction of the tariff on sugar does, in effect, transfer from the Treasury of the United States to the pockets of these New York bankers at least a substantial portion of the immense sums mentioned, one must seriously ponder the reasons why these reductions are made at a time when the Treasury of the United States so sorely needs those millions.

Really, Mr. Speaker, there is another phase of the question I am discussing, the records of which disclose in all its sordid selfishness what happens to the American consumer when he must depend upon a foreign source of supply for his necessities of life.

Let us not forget that the President's evident hostility to the American sugar industry was based in part upon the theory that its existence was in violation of economic law and therefore responsible for an increased price the consumer was paying for this product.

To reach this conclusion Mr. Roosevelt must have assumed that the management of the Cuban sugar interests, whose cost of production because of the starvation wages paid the workers of that country was below the cost of production here, if our domestic industry were to languish and disappear, would in the future sell us their product at a reasonable profit and thus save the American housewife a substantial sum on her sugar each year.

When he sent to the Congress his now famous message, Mr. Roosevelt, in pondering sugar cost, must have had in mind the domestic price for at least a few short years prior thereto. He must have been dissatisfied with that price.

It is a significant fact that the average retail price of sugar during the years 1932, 1933, and 1934 was the lowest it has been in the history of this country. There was nothing about the domestic price to justify the apprehensions of the Presidential mind.

The American people with their greatly increased purchasing power were buying their sugar at a price much lower than those of most other countries in the world. There was nothing about the situation to agitate either a Presidential or an ordinary mind, because it had been demonstrated time and again that so long as our domestic sugar industry could produce and sell sugar in competition with offshore producers the American housewife was assured she would buy this product at a reasonable price.

Mr. Speaker, an examination of the records in the Department of Agriculture discloses the fact that at no time has the price of sugar in this country been unreasonably high except during those periods when for one reason or another there was not a sufficient amount of American-produced sugar in the market to offer substantial competition to the foreign product.

For instance from 1900 to 1915, the yearly average retail price had not in any year exceeded 6.3 cents per pound. In August of 1914 the World War broke in all its fury. From every walk of life in the countries at war, able-bodied men were rushed to the colors, abandoning their work in the factory and the field.

Those physically unfit for military service—the old, the very young, men and women alike—were sent to the farms and the industrial plants to produce as best they could the things which nations at war so desperately need.

Every source of supply in the world was tapped. Orders for food and other war supplies were offered in fabulous amounts. Our farmers and other producers of the country were inspired to their greatest productive efforts to produce the supplies called for. There were not enough workers to do the work required. The great agricultural staples were demanded in ever-increasing quantities.

Our beet-raising farmers, because of the shortage of hand labor, abandoned in part the raising of beets and turned their attention to other needed crops, which could be provided with less human labor.

The effect upon competitive conditions in the domestic sugar market was immediate. The average price of granulated sugar in 1913 was 5.5 cents, in 1914 it had risen to 5.9 cents, in 1915 to 6.6 cents, in 1916 to 8 cents, in 1917 to 9.3 cents, in 1918 to 9.7 cents, in 1919 to 11.3 cents, and in 1920 to 19.4 cents per pound. During this latter year the American housewife, as I have said before, was compelled to pay as high as 32 cents per pound for her sugar. All this happened when the production of American sugar had been substantially reduced.

Now let us see what happened after war had ceased and the nations at war had returned to the pursuits of peace. Soldiers returned to the farms and the factories. Production was again placed on a normal basis. Nations immediately proceeded, as rapidly as possible, to put themselves on a pre-war basis. Labor was available and in 1920 the American sugar-beet farmer returned to a normal sugar-production basis. The effect on the price when the 1920 crop was refined and marketed in the late fall and winter of that year was immediate and startling. The average retail price dropped from the all time high of 19.4 cents in 1920 to 8 cents per pound in 1921.

In 1921 the American farmer produced another normal beet crop resulting in a further reduction of the price in 1922 to 7.3 cents. In 1922 and 1923 our domestic production again fell off and in 1923 the average price moved up to 10.1 cents. In 1924 the price still remained at 9.2 cents per pound.

Mr. Speaker, these figures I have just quoted, observed casually, do not appear particularly significant. To the unthinking the fact that the housewives of the Nation were compelled to pay as high as 32 cents per pound for their sugar over a short period, or that for a whole year the price averaged 19.4 cents, probably does not appear to be anything to become highly exicted about. However, when we ponder the collective effect of such prices as I have quoted, when we learn how much larger a share of the family income must be spent to supply the family need for sugar, when we realize how much less was left with which to buy other needed things, when we realize the many thousands thrown out of work because of this diversion of American purchasing capacity, when we also realize the effect upon our whole national economy because of these increased prices, we are shocked into the realization that nothing should be left undone to protect the consumers from conditions such as faced us during the years 1916 to 1923, inclusive. Yet under the President's recommendations he would return us to those conditions.

I have prepared my tables from the public records. They disclose in all their nakedness what happens to our American consumers when we are placed at the mercy of foreign interests, whether those interests are American owned or not. I commend to your close attention the sordid selfishness disclosed by that group of Americans who own the Cuban sugar interests and who for years have endeavored to destroy our beet-sugar industry—men who seem to know no country, no race, and no creed but the doctrine of "get" so clearly shown in the figures for 1920.

In arriving at the additional cost of sugar to the American consumer, as disclosed by the following table, I have multiplied the total number of pounds of sugar consumed each year by the difference in the average price paid during that year and the year 1934, when Mr. Roosevelt submitted his proposition to the Congress. The price that year was 5.4 cents.

Year	Total yearly consumption (short tons, 2,000 pounds)	Average retail price (cents per pound)	Yearly increased cost to American consumers over price of 5.4 cents
1916	4,219,066	8.0	$219,391,432
1917	4,037,377	9.3	313,915,406
1918	4,371,103	9.7	375,914,858
1919	4,816,862	11.3	567,889,716
1920	5,242,852	19.4	1,467,958,560
1921	5,589,624	8.0	290,660,248
1922	5,899,849	7.3	224,193,882
1923	5,646,223	10.1	530,744,962
Total additional cost of 8 years' dependence upon foreign supplies of sugar			3,990,709,064

Mr. Speaker, I have discussed the cost of sugar during the 8 years when our domestic-sugar industry—cane and beet—was not producing enough sugar to provide effective competition for Cuban and other tropical producers. The price we paid for the luxury of neglecting the development of this splendid industry is appalling. The most tragic part of it all transpired in 1920, when the Wall Street sugar pirates plundered the American pocketbook for something approaching $1,450,000,000 more for the year's sugar supply than we were paying when the President became so alarmed about the possible development of our beet-sugar industry.

It was in 1920, you will remember, that our World War veterans were returning to their homes and to the jobs they had been promised would be waiting for them. That was the time when industrial contracts had been canceled on every hand because war had ceased. The veterans' jobs were largely nonexistent.

It was at that time, too, that the bankers of the Wilson administration determined upon a policy of deflation. They who had so urgently insisted upon local banks extending all credit facilities to farmers during the war, promptly recanted after the signing of peace and ordered the banks to collect the loans. Many of the farmers were heavily in debt. Prices on the things they raised were rapidly tumbling. The farmers could not pay. The local banks in turn could not discharge their obligations to their correspondent banks and to the Federal Reserve banks. Thousands of formerly splendid small-town banking institutions were forced to the wall; their depositors, their stockholders ruined. Everything went to smash. Every person in ordinary circumstances needed every nickel he had.

It was at a time like this that these buccaneers of Wall Street, these favored individuals with large and apparently sacred investments in Cuban sugar, looted the American pocketbooks. Does anybody think they will hesitate to repeat when and if another opportunity presents?

My friends, there is just one thing which can at all times guarantee the American housewife sugar at a reasonable price, and that is a profitable, a rapidly growing sugar-beet industry. There is nothing that can more quickly make a real contribution to the solution of our agricultural problem. There is no single crop from which farmers, laborers, communities, industries, and service organizations receive such substantial benefits as from the sugar-beet crop. It must be encouraged to grow, to expand, to take its proper place in the economic sun of this country.

The Ellender bill, now deeply buried in the Committee on Agriculture of this House after having passed the Senate, will accomplish this. What this House ought to do is to pry that bill out of the committee, pass it, and send it on to the White House. If it meets a Presidential veto, as has been promised, send it back to the White House again with the approval of two-thirds of the Members of this House and the Senate of the United States. Let us give notice to all and sundry that from this time on the laws of this country must be administered primarily in the interest of the American farmer, the American laborer, the American producer, as Congress intends, and not in the interest of those living or having their investments in some foreign land. [Applause.]

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Does the gentleman know any reason why we should not have an adequate tariff on blackstrap coming in from Cuba and other foreign countries?

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I know of many reasons why we should have an adequate tariff on that commodity.

Mr. GILCHRIST. We do not have such a tariff now?

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. We do not.

Mr. GILCHRIST. As a consequence of that, alcohol is made chiefly or in large quantity from the blackstrap that is imported, with a very, very little tariff, from these foreign countries?

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. That is true. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that if the Congress of the United States would seriously consider taking us out of the economic doldrums in which we find ourselves, it could put an exceedingly high tariff on that particular product, supplanting it with good corn and other agricultural products, from which a better grade of alcohol could be manufactured.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. In that way we would put into production millions of acres of American land that the administration today is attempting to take out of production. Chemurgy means the use of agricultural products in industry. Carried to the point where it can be carried, our farm problem can be transformed from one of overproducton to one of underproduction. I think anyone who knows anything about business or farming or anything pertaining thereto, will agree that when that time comes the farmers' problem will have disappeared.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Would not the gentleman go further and say that from a constructive standpoint that solution of the farm problem is superior to any program of regimentation or controlled production?

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. It is the antithesis of regimentation. It is the adoption of the policy of abundance. How the administration in power can continue to attempt to make the intelligent American people believe that the more abundant life can be brought to them without producing in abundance is more than I can understand. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Birmingham Herald, this morning's column, by John Temple Graves, II, one of the outstanding writers and thinkers in the newspaper world.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

There was no objection.

WAGE AND HOUR BILL

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5435) be recommitted to the Committee on Labor for further consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that the wage and hour bill?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DARDEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

WAGE AND HOUR BILL

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request that the bill, H. R. 5435, be recommitted to the Committee on Labor for further consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is for the purpose of perfecting and amending the bill, then bringing it back to the House for further consideration?

Mrs. NORTON. This is for the purpose of revising the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And bringing it back to the House then?

Mrs. NORTON. We hope so.

Mr. COLLINS. That is the reason I did not object the second time.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentlewoman to what bill she has reference?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is the amendments to the wage and hour bill.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I may say I am not at all satisfied that this House will see that bill again this year if it is permitted to go back to the committee, and I therefore object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain extracts from Government publications and letters I have received on the subject of grain sorghums.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Mr. James Myles before the convention of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor in Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROMJUE (at the request of Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri), indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. LORD (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania, for 3 days, on account of urgent business.

To Mr. STARNES of Alabama (at the request of Mr. SPARKMAN), indefinitely, on account of official business in his district.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3116. By Mr. ANDERSON of California: Petitions signed by Antonie McFarlane, of San Jose, and 29 others; Alice Vaughan, of San Jose, and 59 others; E. J. Kaffer, of San Jose, and 59 others; O. M. Wells, of San Jose, and 29 others; F. Scrogings, of San Mateo, and 59 others: Niels Johnson, of San Jose, and 119 others; Anna S. Johnson, of San Jose, and 119 others, of the Eighth Congressional District of California, asking for enactment of the General Welfare Act (H. R. 5620, amended H. R. 11); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3117. By Mr. COLE of New York: Petition of the Pulteney Townsend Club, No. 1; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3118. By Mr. CONNERY: Petition of sundry citizens of the Seventh Congressional District of Massachusetts, urging a just, fair, and impartial hearing before the Congress on House bill 2, which incorporates the salient features of the Townsend national recovery plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3119. Also, resolution of the Massachusetts Laundry Owners' Association, Inc., endorsing amendments to the Social Security Act embracing old-age benefit taxes and unemployment compensation taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3120. By Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT: Petition of the citizens of Indian Falls, Calif., requesting that the General Welfare Act (H. R. 5620, amended H. R. 11) be enacted into law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3121. Also, Senate Joint Resolution No. 15, relative to memorializing Congress to enact legislation to reimburse cotton growers in this State for expenditures made for purchases of tax-exemption certificates pursuant to the Bankhead Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3122. By Mr. JOHNS: Joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, respectfully memorializing the Federal Government to restore the tariff rates on raw furs to the level that existed before such change; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3123. Also, petition of Emil H. Uhlenbrauck and 116 other dairy farmers of Outagamie County, Wis., respectfully petitioning the Congress of the United States to approve the Wisconsin dairy program; to the Committee on Agriculture.

3124. By Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY: Petition of the Switchmen's Union of North America, general adjustment committee, Western Pacific Railway, Oakland, Calif., urging support of House bill 4862; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3125. Also, petition of Lodge No. 68, International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers, Pine Bluff, Ark., urging support of House bill 4862; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3126. By Mr. MAHON: Petition of B. W. Stinson and R. A. Walker, president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the Brownfield (Tex.) Townsend Club, No. 1, regarding House bill 2, known as the General Welfare Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3127. By Mr. VAN ZANDT: Petition of A. E. Taylor, president, and O. B. Wise, secretary, of the Townsend Clubs of Blair County, Pa., expressing the thought that hearings on House bill 2, popularly known as the Townsend plan, reflect definite proof that the bill will restore prosperity to the Nation by retirement of persons over 60 years of age and afford a means of employment to the young people of the country and urging the Ways and Means Committee to report this bill to the floor of the House immediately; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3128. Also, petition of W. H. Miller, president, and O. B. Wise, secretary, Townsend Club, No. 5, Altoona, Pa., deploring lack of purchasing power in the hands of the citizenry, together with the great number of persons unemployed; urging the Ways and Means Committee to vote out House bill 2 as an expression of carrying out the wishes of millions of citizens; expressing the view that failure to report the bill to the floor will mean the committee is following the wishes of private interests; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, May 8, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, D. D., LL. D., canon of Washington Cathedral, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray: Direct us, O Lord, in all our doings with Thy most gracious favor, and further us with Thy continual help, that in all our work begun, continued, and ended in Thee, and especially in the making of laws for the people of this great Nation, drawn from many kindreds and many tongues, we may glorify Thy holy name and advance Thy kingdom of peace, good will, and justice throughout the world. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, May 16, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 595. An act to increase further the efficiency of the Coast Guard by authorizing the retirement under certain conditions of enlisted personnel thereof with 20 or more years of service;

S. 965. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Port Authority of Duluth, Minn., and the Harbor Commission of Superior, Wis., to construct a highway bridge across the St. Louis River from Rices Point in Duluth, Minn., to Superior in Wisconsin," approved June 30, 1938; and

S. 1876. An act to readjust the commissioned personnel of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Georgia Osteopathic Association, Atlanta, Ga., favoring the amendment of Senate bill 1620, the so-called national health bill, so as to preserve the freedom of choice of the physician and school of practice to persons entitled to medical care, and providing osteopathic representation on Federal and State advisory councils, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution of the Kansas State Osteopathic Association, Wichita, Kans., favoring the amendment of Senate bill 1620, the so-called national health bill, so as to preserve the freedom of choice of the physician and school of practice to persons entitled to medical care, and providing osteopathic representation on Federal and State advisory councils, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter from the president and chairman of the legislative committee of the Sedgwick County Medical Society, Wichita, Kans., expressing opposition to the so-called National Health Act of 1939 (S. 1620), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, of Wellington, Kans., favoring action to stop the shipment of munitions and war supplies to Japan for use in operations in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LEE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1907) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Montana, or the counties of Roosevelt, Richland, and McCone, singly or jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Missouri River at or near Poplar, Mont., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 440) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 441) thereon.

Mr. BRIDGES (for himself, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. GURNEY), as members of the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted minority views on the foregoing bill (S. 1650), which were ordered to be printed as a part of Report No. 441.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 915) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 442) thereon.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1874) to amend the Criminal Code in regard to obtaining money by false pretenses on the high seas, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 446) thereon.

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 443) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1808. A bill giving the consent and approval of Congress to the Rio Grande compact signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on March 18, 1938 (Rept. No. 444); and

H. R. 4997. A bill giving the consent and approval of Congress to the Rio Grande compact signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on March 18, 1938 (Rept. No. 445).

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT—MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD, as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted minority views on the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, heretofore reported from that committee with amendments, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 433.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LEE:

S. 2434. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in cotton, providing for the orderly marketing of cotton at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce, insuring to cotton producers a parity income from cotton based upon parity price or cost of production, whichever is higher, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SMATHERS:

S. 2435. A bill to provide for the passing of intelligence tests by aliens prior to their admission into the United States for permanent residence; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. 2436. A bill authorizing the marking of the channel in the Homosassa River, Fla.; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 2437. A bill to provide for the holding of a term of the district court of the United States at Fort Myers, Fla.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BILBO (for himself and Mr. SHEPPARD):

S. 2438. A bill prohibiting officers and employees of the United States from receiving payments of special taxes on liquor dealers from persons engaged in the business of selling liquors in violation of State laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mrs. CARAWAY:

S. 2439. A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use of the American Legion Convention to be held at Helena, Ark., during the month of July 1939; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GEORGE:

S. 2440. A bill to amend Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) part III, paragraph 1 (e) and (f), as amended, to liberalize the definition of, and to increase the pension payable for, permanent total non-service-connected disability; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. TAFT:

S. 2441. A bill providing for a survey of the proposed General Anthony Wayne Memorial Parkway; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. BURKE:

S. 2442. A bill relating to hospitalization and domiciliary care for certain retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2443. A bill authorizing the Railroad Retirement Board to pay an annuity to Ollie N. Bagley; and

S. 2444. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, to prohibit certain discriminatory practices with respect to the granting of transit privileges; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 2445. A bill granting a pension to Mary L. Robinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 2446. A bill to amend section 12, title 34, Supplement IV, United States Code (49 Stat. 959), relating to the appointment of Naval Academy graduates as ensigns in the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

S. 2447. A bill authorizing the sale of certain real estate in the District of Columbia no longer required for public purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 2448. A bill to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to employ engineers and economists for consultation purposes on important reclamation work," approved February 28, 1929 (45 Stat. 1406); to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

S. 2449. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to adjust the compensation of certain employees in the Customs Service," approved May 29, 1928, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADDITIONAL LAND FOR MILITARY PURPOSES—RECOMMITTAL

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move that the bill (S. 2223) to authorize the acquisition of additional lands for military purposes be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs in order that the committee may have opportunity for further study of the measure.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL WORKS—DRYDOCK, SOUTH BOSTON, MASS.—AMENDMENT

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2878) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I submit a notice in writing, which reads as follows:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

On page 27, line 19, beginning with the word "Provided", to strike out through the word "thereto", on page 28, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That no part of the appropriations for the Navy Department, the War Department, or the Coast Guard contained in this act or any other act shall hereafter be available for the procurement of any article of food not grown or produced in the United States or its possessions, except articles of food not so grown or produced or which cannot be procured in sufficient quantities as and when needed, and except procurements by vessels or establishments in foreign waters or countries for the personnel attached thereto."

Mr. HALE also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For text of the amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

CAPT. OBERLIN M. CARTER

Mr. WILEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 133), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs is authorized and directed to investigate the facts leading to the court martial, as well as the court-martial proceedings and all the findings, in the case of former Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, United States Engineer Corps, and report to the Senate.

PROPOSED PARITY PAYMENTS ON CORN—LETTER FROM SENATOR JOHNSON OF COLORADO TO SENATOR M'NARY

[Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter dated May 17, 1939, written by him to Senator MCNARY, on the subject of proposed parity payments on corn, which appears in the Appendix.]

NEUTRALITY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR SHIPSTEAD

[Mr. JOHNSON of California asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator SHIPSTEAD on Tuesday, May 16, 1939, on the subject of neutrality, which appears in the Appendix.]

PAN AMERICANISM VERSUS EUROPEAN MEDDLING—ADDRESS BY SENATOR CHAVEZ

[Mr. BILBO asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator CHAVEZ on Thursday, May 11, 1939, on the subject Pan Americanism Versus European Meddling, which appears in the Appendix.]

BUILDERS OF THE FUTURE—ADDRESS BY PHILIP C. EBELING

[Mr. FRAZIER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject Builders of the Future, delivered by Philip C. Ebeling, president of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, at Valley City, N. Dak., which appears in the Appendix.]

BANKERS AND RECOVERY—ADDRESS BY E. C. LOVE

[Mr. LEE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Bankers and Recovery," delivered by E. C. Love, president of the Oklahoma Bankers' Association, at Oklahoma City, which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICAN EXPERTS AND RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

[Mr. MEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to him by Joseph L. Ryan, foreign director of the Royal Typerwiter Co., on the subject of the effect of reciprocal-trade agreements on American exports, which appears in the Appendix.]

PURCHASE OF ARGENTINE CANNED BEEF—ARTICLE BY ARTHUR KROCK

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Times of May 16, 1939, by Arthur Krock, entitled "The Great Beef Tempest in Nonexistent Cans," which appears in the Appendix.]

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1100) for the completion of the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday, the question before the Senate was the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE]. The Chair has been advised that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] desires to discuss the pending question, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, in the talk I shall make on this subject I shall try to be as brief as possible. I shall also try to confine myself to the record facts, and the opinions of experts and others on whom we usually depend when subjects are presented which require some peculiar knowledge and experience.

When nature fashioned the continent of North America the long peninsula of Florida was placed as a barrier between the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico. Likewise, along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts lesser peninsulas were placed which are dangerous barriers to coastal commerce, while on the interior mountain ranges and broad rivers were fashioned as impediments to land commerce.

As the Nation grew and our population increased the demand for cheaper and faster transport and interchange of commodities became more insistent; and we spanned the rivers with bridges of steel and concrete, tunneled under the mountains and rivers, developed our seaports, built an inland waterway system along our Atlantic and Gulf coasts, removed the navigation barrier of Cape Cod by construction of the Cape Cod Canal, and removed the barrier of the State of Delaware and the Eastern Shore of Maryland by the construction of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal.

That the Maker intended to have man shorten the route for his commerce between the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico seems obvious, for there He fashioned three rivers with an intervening section of land of only 29 miles.

Into the Gulf of Mexico flow the great rivers which drain all the watershed of the vast area of the United States lying between the Rockies and the Alleghenies, and by water and by rail a vast commerce moves from this area to and from the Gulf ports. East of the Alleghenies the rivers run into the Atlantic; and here, again, both by rail and by water, a vast commerce moves to and from the Atlantic ports. Between the Atlantic and the Gulf ports the ocean ship is the common medium of transportation.

Around Florida this traffic moves today, and it has so grown in volume that it exceeds three times the traffic which passes through the Panama Canal, or 90,000,000 tons annually.

In the holds of these ships are products from the States of practically all the Senators in this Chamber. The War Department is authority for the statement that this canal will benefit 74 percent of the population of the United States, 70 percent of the farmers, and 73 percent of the manufacturers, which facts led the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives to report that—

Its benefits will increase with time and will accrue to a larger portion of our country and its population than those of almost any other Federal public work.

Living as I do in the Peninsula State, I know something of the multitudinous foreign islands lying off the coast of Florida and in the Caribbean. They are friendly today; but will it be ever thus? Will some nation be "appeased," and these islands fall into unfriendly hands? Or may they be taken by an unfriendly nation? Certainly our Government must now recognize that this is not beyond the realm of possibility. Why else did it recently create a Department of the Caribbean? Possibly many of the Senators recall that shortly after the Munich Conference, General Johnson stated in his column that one of the demands made by Mr. Hitler upon Mr. Chamberlain was that Germany be given bases for planes and submarines in the Caribbean. We can either convoy every ship that passes through the Caribbean to and from the Panama Canal in time of war and at great expense, and possibly with great loss of life and property, or we can build this canal to serve our vast peacetime commerce and use it to untold advantage in time of war.

There are those who would becloud the issue with false economy and by failure to differentiate between an authorization and an appropriation. When this Nation authorizes the improvement of a river or a harbor, or the construction of an improvement for navigation which is in the public interest and economically justifiable, returning, as it will, an economic saving to the people of the Nation who pay for it, certainly that is not an expense but an investment by the Nation for its betterment. That reasoning does not apply to this project alone, but it applies to all worthy river and harbor, navigation, flood-control, or reclamation projects.

This bill goes even further, and provides that tolls may be collected if that course is deemed wise. Further, there are those who would lead us to believe that the Treasury will save money if this bill is defeated. Certainly nothing could be further from the truth, for the bill only provides authorization in the same manner in which it is accorded to practically all other projects which have been investigated by the same agencies that investigated this project and favorably reported to the Congress. If authorization is granted, in due course this project will come back before us for an appropriation, and at that time the appropriation and the rate of the appropriation will be entirely within our discretion. So I charge that those who term an authorization bill an appropriation are using an expression which is not well founded.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. As I understand, the bill before us is an authorization bill. It is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. ANDREWS. That is correct.

Mr. HUGHES. If the bill should pass, the appropriation would have to be made later?

Mr. ANDREWS. It would have to be made later.

Mr. HUGHES. With the Senator's permission, I should like to state that I feel very favorable to waterways of this sort, and I shall support the Senator's bill for several reasons.

I have had some experience with a similar canal through the northern part of the Delmarva Peninsula, which is composed of Delaware and the eastern shores of Maryland and Virginia. Such a project was proposed away back in 1799, and a canal was built across the end of the peninsula in a location somewhat similar to that of the proposed canal across the State of Florida. In fact, the Delmarva Peninsula is shaped very much like the State of Florida. It goes down to the ocean at the south end, and there are the two great estuaries of Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bay, one on the east and the other on the west, and then the peninsula comes north, so that a canal could be built across it of a length of 13½ miles.

In 1824 a number of individuals raised money and built a canal of a depth of 12 feet. It was successful, and operated for quite a number of years, but it was not sufficient for the business which such a canal might do. In 1919 the Federal Government made arrangements with the owners by which it purchased their interest in the canal, and started a project of building a canal 250 feet wide and 27 feet deep, changing the existing canal from one that had four locks to a sea-level canal. The project now is almost completed. The result is that the commercial advantages of the canal have doubled and trebled, and the amount of freight and passenger traffic going through the canal is enormous. We think very highly of it.

The suggestion which I heard made here that cutting a canal through the northern part of the Senator's State might interfere with the water supply in the rest of the State I suppose probably was made about our canal also, because it was cut through the northern part of the State, leaving the long peninsula down below, but the construction of the canal has had no effect on the water supply. On the contrary, it is a very useful canal and, for the reasons I stated before, it has cost the Government $30,469,800 up to June of last year.

Because of my knowledge of the canal in Delaware, and my appreciation of the benefits coming from it to the sections it touches, I am in favor of the construction of the Florida canal. One of the moving purposes of the building of the canal in Delaware was that it would be a safeguard in case of war, because Philadelphia, Chester, and Wilmington, at the north, on the Delaware, and Baltimore, on Chesapeake Bay, could use it for the transshipment of munitions, and all that sort of thing. It would be a safeguard, an inland waterway, which I think the Florida canal would be. I have seen the parts of the Florida canal where construction has been in progress; I have seen the digging going on there; and for the reasons I have stated, and for other reasons, I feel I can support an authorization of this kind, and I think it ought to be passed by the Senate.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Delaware for his observations.

For the reasons I have given, I earnestly ask my colleagues to pass this authorization bill:

First, because it comes before the Senate after full investigation, approved by the regular constituted governmental authorities.

Second, its value for national defense.

Third, that public works of this nature have a very definite investment value as opposed to expense items.

Fourth, because it will provide, at no additional expense, the vital missing link in our inland waterway system from Boston to Mexico, and thus connect the Atlantic inland waterway system and the Gulf inland waterway system, upon each of which we have spent millions of dollars, but have no way of passing traffic from one system to the other.

It is my belief that no proposed public improvement having to do with waterways has had such a thorough investigation by the Army engineers and other experts, and more particularly through the instrumentalities of the committee of the House of Representatives, which has recently made its report, No. 950.

After hearings on each item, this report finds that:

1. The Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal will serve as a major element of national defense in time of war.

2. The canal will afford an unusually expeditious, safe, and convenient waterway for practically all vessels sailing to and from the Gulf of Mexico.

3. By connecting the intracoastal canal system of the Atlantic seaboard and that of the Gulf of Mexico, this canal will serve to complete these systems and substantially enhance the value of both.

4. A very great and real value in the increased safety to life and property afforded by ship transit by way of this protected route as opposed to the extreme seasonal hazards incident to violent hurricanes in the Straits of Florida.

5. The opposition is not well founded.

6. Its economic justification is beyond question.

7. Its benefits will increase with time and will accrue to a larger portion of our country and its population than those of almost any other Federal public work.

8. Its construction is needful and in the public interest.

9. Your committee is of the opinion that the policy of the construction by the Federal Government of river and harbor projects and improvements for navigation in general, when these are found to be in the public interest and to be economically justifiable, will always form a basic element in any sound fiscal policy, and that this view is supported by the expressed legislative judgments of the Congress throughout our history. The authorization of the Atlantic-Gulf Canal is governed by that policy. The work, already well begun, will necessarily require a number of years. Your committee recommends that its completion be now authorized.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I notice on the chart on the wall that the total number of dollars per year saved by ships going through the canal rather than around the lower end of Florida is $14,934,000. That is based on a per ship average saving of $850. I notice also from another chart that the cost of the canal is to be $198,000,000. In other words, the annual saving, roughly speaking, would about pay for the canal in 15 years. Are these figures correct?

Mr. ANDREWS. If the Senator will notice farther down the chart, he will see what the expenditures are to be, and the figure will not be so large.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would not be a saving of $14,000,000 a year?

Mr. ANDREWS. It would be a saving of $14,000,000 a year, as I understand it, with the deductions for operation.

Mr. TYDINGS. This was what I had in mind: Assuming, then, that there would be a net saving which would in 20 years make up the cost of the canal, which will be $198,000,000, would it be possible to charge ships going through the canal a sum of money slightly under what they would expend if they went around Florida, and finance the project in that way instead of out of Government funds?

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield in order that I may answer the question of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. LEE. An amendment has been proposed providing just what the Senator suggests, the liquidation of the cost of construction over a period of 50 years, carrying the maintenance and operating costs also.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, under the amendment to which the Senator refers, the Government would put up all the money, tolls would be collected, and the Government would be reimbursed?

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the estimated tolls be sufficient in 50 years to pay interest, sinking fund, and maintenance?

Mr. LEE. It has not been figured on that basis. It has been figured on the basis of retiring the construction cost and the maintenance and operating costs, but not the interest.

Mr. TYDINGS. Everything but the interest?

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. To what extent is it estimated tolls would cut down the number of ships which it is assumed would use the canal if no tolls were charged for passage through it?

Mr. LEE. The total amount of ship tonnage going around in 1937 was 138,000,000 ship tons. The estimate of the number of tons that would transit the canal on which the figure I used was based was 91,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, the figure I assumed, as represented on this chart, takes into consideration the tonnage which would go through the canal if no tolls were charged?

Mr. LEE. I presume so; I am not so familiar with those figures.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was just wondering what proportion of the tonnage now represented as 91,000,000—and, of course, it would be an estimate only—would use the canal if transit were free, and to what extent the same tonnage would go around in the event tolls contemplated in the amendment were imposed on ships.

Mr. LEE. I suggest that on the basis of the figures I submitted yesterday, and on which the amendment was drawn, namely, that 91,000,000 tons would transit the canal and pay the tolls which would be necessary to retire the construction costs in 50 years, the charge would amount to 5½ cents a ton, whereas most of the witnesses testified that ships would pay as high as 8 cents a ton and still go through the canal rather than go around. It would be questionable as to how many would go through and how many would go around. In other words, it seemed that 8 cents a ton was the point of diminishing return.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I had in mind was that the figure of 91,000,000 tons, of course, represented the estimated tonnage going through the canal if no tolls were imposed. It seemed to me, without having any information, that there would probably have to be some reduction in that figure if tolls were imposed. There would be some ships which might want to go around in order to save the payment of tolls.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to thank the Senator from Maryland for propounding his inquiry, because all we are trying to do is to get the facts before the Senate.

If the Senator will look at page 97 of the report of the Senate hearings, which he has on his desk, he will find that every one of the boards which has made an investigation of this subject has indicated about what the saving per ton on commodities which pass through the canal would be. The average saving per ton found by those investigations is 15 cents.

There have been two authorities which have directed themselves directly to the question of the amount of tolls shipping would pay. One of them was Dr. Johnson, who calculated the toll structure of the Panama Canal.

Mr. TYDINGS. Permit me to interrupt, so I may be able to follow the Senator's statement. The tonnage represented here is the tonnage of cargo and not the displacement of the ship?

Mr. PEPPER. The tonnage of cargo. One of the authorities was Dr. Johnson, who calculated and set up the toll structure for the Panama Canal. The other was the intradepartmental board, consisting of two engineers from the War Department and two engineers from the P. W. A., and one engineer selected by those four engineers. In its study of the question of tolls made by direction of the President when the applications for loans were pending before the P. W. A. a few years ago, that board set up 8 cents as the amount that the ships would pay on the cargo which transited the canal. Although the board said the ships would pay 8 cents a ton, in view of the fact that the benefits were an average of 15 cents a ton at that time, the quantity of tonnage which was transiting the Straits of Florida and the potential tonnage through the canal was not large enough to make the canal self-liquidating. That tonnage, however, was calculated on the basis of 1931. The tonnage transiting the Straits of Florida since 1931 has increased 100 percent. As a matter of fact, it increased 50 percent between 1935 and 1937. So that now the Senator may calculate that the 91,000,000 tons represent the cargo tonnage which would transit the canal had it been in existence in 1937. As a matter of fact there has been a further increase of tonnage since that time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Am I interrupting the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] by asking these questions?

Mr. ANDREWS. No, Mr. President; the Senator is not interrupting me. My colleague [Mr. PEPPER] was a member of the committee and heard all the testimony with respect to the canal.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was obliged to be in Baltimore yesterday, so could not be in the Senate and hear the discussion of the subject which took place then. Perhaps I missed many of the points concerning which I am now asking questions, which may have been answered yesterday. I wish to inform myself concerning the matter, however. Is it possible to finance all this construction by private financing?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am not prepared to say about that, but I would say that the chances are, of course, not considerable.

Mr. TYDINGS. Because it is too large an amount?

Mr. PEPPER. Because it is too large an amount.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it contemplated that the State of Florida will have any financial responsibility in the repayment of the money expended?

Mr. PEPPER. The State of Florida has created by legislation, the Florida ship canal authority, which has procured at a cost of around $3,000,000, and presented to the United States Government free the right-of-way upon which the canal is to be constructed.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much did that cost?

Mr. PEPPER. About $3,000,000. In addition to that the State of Florida, through its road department, has assumed the responsibility for the construction of all the highway bridges across the canal and the maintenance of those bridges which will be necessary.

Mr. TYDINGS. One more question. First, is it possible, and, second, would it be feasible for the State of Florida to give its bonds to the Federal Government for the money that the Federal Government would put up to build the canal, and provide that the State of Florida might collect the tolls and reimburse the Federal Government for the expense of building the canal? In other words, to have the State of Florida the maker of the note and the Federal Government the endorser, rather than to have the Federal Government both the maker and the endorser, while the beneficiary, so to speak, stands aside?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will have to answer the Senator "no" to that question, because the Constitution of the State of Florida forbids the State from issuing bonds except to repel invasion or to suppress insurrection. So we do not have the legal authority to do that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am just eliciting information and keeping an open mind on this matter. Is the machinery for amending the Constitution of Florida complex, and would it take much time to amend the constitution, assuming the people wanted to amend it?

Mr. PEPPER. Senator, I do not know. The complexity of it would be a matter of opinion. It is like most constitutional amendments. The legislature would have to adopt the amendment by two-thirds majority of those present and voting, and then it would have to be submitted to the public for ratification, in practically the same way that other constitutional amendments are proposed and ratified. I will say two things to the Senator. In the first place I do not think it is feasible for a State which has a population of only 1,600,000 to undertake to do what the Senator asked, and in the second place Florida is the smallest beneficiary of all the States from the point of view of the canal, except for the fact that the construction will occur in the State of Florida. The Mississippi Valley, as indicated on the two maps on the wall, will derive a great deal more benefit to its commerce from the construction of the canal than the State of Florida will derive, and that is attested by every engineering board which has investigated the subject.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to ask another question. I did not hear it all, or perhaps I read it in a report, but as I recall the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] some time ago submitted a report or put a statement in the RECORD, or else I read it in the committee hearings, to the effect that he had gotten in touch with many shipping lines, and as I recall a majority of the shipping lines that he had contacted stated they would not use the canal even if it were built. I may not have the matter correctly in mind, but that is my recollection of what the Senator from Michigan said. Am I misinformed with respect to that? I make that inquiry because I wish to ask a question based on that statement, and I do not want to have my premise incorrect.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if I may respond in the time of the Senator from Florida, I will say that yesterday I submitted the letters of ship operators presented to the committee by General Markham as his reliance. There were nine of them. I presented letters from nine ship operators, the net result of which was that two said they were no longer operating in the waters involved, and therefore could not use the canal anyway, and the other seven agreed that it was economically unsound, and that they did not contemplate its use.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before the Senator answers that statement, will he encompass in his answer, if possible, whether or not the lines to which the Senator from Michigan alludes are included in the estimate of tonnage of cargo which would use the canal in making up the financial estimates with respect to liquidating the construction?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I will say to the Senator that they are included.

In answer to the query which the Senator has put to me, I may read from House Document No. 194, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, pages 144 and 145. This is a comment by the engineers of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator mean the United States Army engineers?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes. I read.

The claim has been made by opponents of the canal that ships will not use it. If shipowners fail to use a route offering an average saving in time of 22.02 hours per trip, with probable annual savings in 1935 estimated at $9,553,244, it would mean a complete reversal of past policy and would be contrary to all business principles, unless the route be attended with so many hazards to navigation as to eliminate or greatly reduce the savings. * * *

The Board has endeavored to ascertain the view of shipping companies with reference to the canal. Seventy-four letters were directed to owners or operators, from which only 29 replies were received. Of these, 14 were favorable to its construction, 5 were unfavorable, and 10 were unresponsive. (See exhibit 2, annex 2, for details.) The lack of response to questions of this character is not unusual.

The great majority of potential users of the Atlantic-Gulf Canal are vessels pertaining to the petroleum industry carrying crude oil from the Gulf field to refineries located largely on the Atlantic. The effect of the canal would be to place the Gulf oil fields in a better competitive relation with other fields, particularly South American fields. As a matter of public policy, this effect may not be a desirable one at this time. It may be better to allow present demands for petroleum to be supplied from the latter fields while domestic resources are conserved.

The establishment of terminal facilities along the canal is essential to a realization of the predicted local benefits. No local commerce of importance can be expected to develop at once, particularly the kind whose movement is dependent on expensive facilities, until there have been provided wharves, warehouses, cooling plants, etc., the construction of which should be assured as promptly as possible.

There is no question that the canal will offer a practicable and safe route for ships. The dimensions are ample and the lights and signals proposed are of a more advanced type than any heretofore in use. There are no sharp turns or bends in the channel except at Dames Point in the existing improvement below Jacksonville, which has been widened to 1,000 feet.

Mr. TYDINGS. I assume that the Senator's answer must inevitably be in the affirmative.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator permit me to finish the paragraph?

Mr. TYDINGS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he had finished.

Mr. PEPPER. No.

Visibility is ample, and there are no objectionable currents. There are fewer bends per unit of length than on any other major canal. The ships in this trade are now using channels and canals all over the world offering less facilities for navigation.

It is believed that the use of the Atlantic-Gulf Canal, at least to the extent estimated herein, will follow as the logical and inevitable business for commercial result.

In addition to that, there are some 10 letters which a little while later I wish to put into the RECORD, which I failed to advert to yesterday. Those letters are from shipping companies who said they would use the canal.

The answer, then, to the Senator's query would be that the experts say it is the safest canal in all the world. It has more aids to navigation than any other canal in the world has. The Senate has just heard read the statement by the engineers that it is straighter than any other canal in the world. The engineers have done everything that science can do with respect to the removal of bends and other impediments to make it a safe transit canal for navigation. It is 100 feet wider than the Panama Canal. It is 200 feet wider than the Suez Canal and the Kiel Canal.

In view of those advantages it will save the ships 23 to 24 hours on an average, which will mean that they will be saved 400 miles in average sailing time, and in dollars and cents, as found by the engineers, the saving, estimated for 1935, of $9,555,244.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think no one would take exception to the fact that it would be a nice thing to have the canal. Of course, if we had the money available, probably nine-tenths of the argument that is going on now would not be made. The thing I want to convince myself about is this: If the amendment we have been discussing shall be adopted, will enough revenue be provided to repay the United States Government for the cost of the canal as visualized? I take it the Senator is pretty well convinced that there would be sufficient revenue.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; and I should like to summarize the reasons.

Mr. ANDREWS. The benefit to the public must also be taken into consideration.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate that; but the question is, Where are we going to get the money? I do not ask that question in any parsimonious spirit; but we are reaching the point where we cannot proceed with expenditures of $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 without knowing where the money is coming from.

Mr. PEPPER. I appreciate the Senator taking the interest to make these inquiries and permitting us to answer the questions. Every board which has investigated the subject has found average savings per ton of 15 cents. We start with that premise. The engineers say that experience——

Mr. TYDINGS. If I may interrupt the Senator, I think I have covered the field as to which I was inquisitive. If the canal is to be built, I wish it were possible for the State of Florida to deposit its bonds with the United States Government as security for the repayment of the loan, and for the State of Florida to collect the tolls. However, I understand there are constitutional prohibitions in the way. Is there any other way in which the arrangement could be set up so that the Government would not be both the maker and endorser of the note but would be rather the endorser of the bonds?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator that I do not think that course would be legally possible. In the second place, I do not think it would be morally right for the State of Florida, which happens to be a narrow peninsula carrying 171 miles of the canal, to take the sole responsibility or make the sole contribution because, as I have said, the Army engineers, after the most exhaustive investigation any project has ever had, have found that the part of the country which would benefit most from the project is not the State of Florida but the Atlantic seaboard and the Middle West. Baltimore, Md., as a shipping center, would be one of the chief beneficiaries of the canal.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to interrupt the Senator long enough to say that a new highway bridge is now being built across the Susquehanna River near where I live. It is proposed to pay for the cost of constructing the bridge out of the tolls, but the Federal Government is putting up only part of the money. The State of Maryland is putting up the remainder of the money, and has created a bridge authority, similar to the Florida canal authority, to collect the tolls. However, the State of Maryland has a moral, and to a large extent a legal, obligation to see that the project is liquidated, whether tolls are collected or not.

I wish it were possible to set up the Florida canal project in somewhat the same way so that the people using it would ultimately pay for it. I do not see how Florida would be penalized because first of all, as the Senator has pointed out, it is a national project and not a State project. Of course, the Senators from Florida would like to develop Florida. All the rest of us would like to see Florida developed. The Senators would like to have all the extra work made in Florida. We would all be glad to see such activity. Nevertheless, unless it can be shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the revenues from the ships which will use the canal will be sufficient to liquidate the loan I, for one, in spite of the fact that in the abstract I would favor the project, would have to withhold my vote for it, because with the national debt at $40,000,000,000, and a big deficit this year, I think the Federal Government is at a point where it has to stop making expenditures unless it knows where the money is coming from.

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator, by way of advance notice, if he did not hear the statement yesterday, that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] gave notice that he intended to propose an amendment to the Lee-Mead-Truman amendment which would provide that before the resumption of construction on the canal, which would mean, in substance, before any appropriation is made, the Congress should have before it the results of a thorough study which the President would cause to be made by competent agencies, to advise the Congress, before making the appropriation, whether or not the appropriation would be justified.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know of anything that is fairer to the Congress than that amendment, which we propose to accept.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for his answers to my questions, and I apologize to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] for interrupting him at such length.

Mr. ANDREWS. I am pleased to have the question elucidated.

Mr. President, just a short comment on the question of whether or not the steamship lines will use the canal. If we read the history of the construction of all such canals we will find that transportation companies as a whole have never favored such projects. As transportation companies they do not like to follow the shortest distance between two points because there is less miles and less charges. My understanding is that some of these Gulf ship lines receive $2.50 per mile to carry the mail. If they can add 500 miles to their distance, it means $1,250 more. The railroads have never favored canals, although I do not see how this one could possibly injure them. In fact, it would increase their earning capacity to a great extent, as much of the materials and supplies which would be used in constructing the canal would come from the States north of us.

I shall now conclude what I was stating with regard to the report of the committee of the House on the cross-State canal.

> The policy of the construction by the Federal Government of river and harbor projects and improvements for navigation in general, when these are found to be in the public interest and to be economically justifiable, will always form a basic element in any sound fiscal policy, and that this view is supported by the expressed legislative judgments of the Congress throughout our history. The authorization of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal is governed by that policy. The work, already well begun, will necessarily require a number of years. Your committee recommends that its completion be now authorized.

I shall now discuss in more or less detail the issues which have been raised in the long controversy over the construction of the Florida canal. First I should like to refer to the past history. I am fairly well acquainted with that history. More than 100 years ago, soon after Andrew Jackson captured Florida from the Spanish, my people settled in Florida. I now have kinsmen, either by consanguinity or affinity, in practically every county of Florida. No Member of Congress is more interested than I in seeing that the right thing is done by the people of Florida, more particularly with regard to whether or not the construction of the canal would have a deleterious effect upon the underground water supply of my State.

More than 100 years ago the first legislative attempt was made in Congress to construct a canal across the northern portion of the Peninsula of Florida. The first such measure was approved in 1825. Several such measures have been enacted since that time. In 1927, under the administration of President Coolidge, an authorization was given to make surveys. In 1930 or 1931, under President Hoover's administration, there was an authorization of $500,000 for the purpose of making a complete survey across the State of Florida to determine the feasibility of such a plan, its advisability, the place where the canal should go, and whether it should be a barge canal, sea-level canal, or lock canal. That investigation was made over a period of years by officials of the Government who were specially trained in such work. The RECORD here will show their names. I shall refer to them later.

In matters of this kind, requiring expert knowledge and official responsibility, my policy is and has been to follow constituted authority. Many persons are willing to express their views upon almost any question without assuming any responsibility.

Many books and pamphlets have been written about the cross-State canal. Many are written by persons who have made no personal investigation, who have never seen the route, but have merely read about it in some magazine or periodical. Those who have investigated personally, those who have gone into it thoroughly, and who are charged with official responsibility, have submitted their findings, and they are in the reports of both the House committee and the Senate committee.

The cross-State canal is not a Florida project. As has been pointed out to the Senate, perhaps the State of Florida will derive less benefit from its construction than will any of the States west of Florida in the Mississippi Valley, the Missouri Valley, and the coast States on the Atlantic. We can only surmise what the advantages to the State of Florida will be. In other words, the canal would be a through ship highway, and, as the record shows, would affect 74 percent of the population of the United States.

There can be no question that it would have a great effect in bringing about a reduction of freight rates. The history of inland navigation in the United States shows in every instance that waterways have not adversely affected the railways. For instance, the improved water traffic on the Great Lakes, on the St. Lawrence River, and the canals which have been constructed there on the rivers has not been deleterious to the railways but has developed the greatest railway system around the Great Lakes to be found on this earth.

Naturally the subject I feel most interested is that with reference to the people of the State of Florida. I want to be definitely and reasonably certain that the construction of the Florida ship canal will not injuriously affect the underground water supply of the southern peninsula of Florida. I live 80 miles south of the canal; I live in that section where it is said by some that there will be a detrimental effect. I will undertake to show that those persons who have gone into this question thoroughly, those who have gone into it in an official capacity, and who have expert knowledge along that line, have stated over their signatures in reports submitted officially, that the construction of the canal could not have any harmful effect upon the underground water supply of south Florida, with the possible exception of a distance of 15 miles of the canal.

It so happens that the canal zone is being deeded to the United States and has been going on for 2 or 3 years. It happens also that the 29 miles cut through the ridge from one river bottom to the other go through a portion of Florida which, it is said, is about the most worthless mile-wide strip of land in the State. The fact that the construction of the canal may lower the water a few feet in wells in that vicinity does not mean that it will be detrimental to a great portion of the southern peninsula of Florida miles away; in fact, I may show before I conclude that that question has been covered thoroughly, and we are willing to leave it to the judgment of the Senate as to whether or not there would be any harmful effect to any appreciable degree.

It so happens that the canal is to be constructed across what the official reports refer to as "the saddle of the peninsula." There three large rivers flow from the south to the zone where the canal is proposed to be dug: (1) The Withlacoochee rises south of the canal, flows many miles north, turns west, and runs into the Gulf of Mexico at the point where the canal reaches the Gulf of Mexico; (2) the Oklawaha River rises some 60 or 80 miles south in Lake Apopka, which is something over 12 miles across, and it flows through four or five other lakes, some of which are 6 miles long and 3 or 4 miles wide. That region is called the great lakes region of Florida. The Oklawaha then flows down near Silver Spring, where it connects with the river that comes out of Silver Spring, and then into the St. Johns River. The St. Johns River rises 140 or 150 miles south of where the canal is to be cut. It also flows north.

I learned quite early that water does not run up hill. I am still of that belief. It so happens that the highest water level, sometimes spoken of by geologists as the "high," is near Lake Wales about 75 or 80 miles south of the proposed canal. Many Senators have been to Lake Wales. That great district of many hundreds of square miles is spoken of as the "high" of the southern peninsula. From this "high" the artesian flow reaches around Sarasota, also around Sanford and along the upper St. Johns. Upon this high elevation there are many large lakes, and are very few rivers to take the rainfall to the sea. We have anywhere from 52 to 60 inches of rainfall during the year in Florida. In Florida the problem which has concerned us most in previous years is how to drain Florida in order to prevent crops and highways being flooded. It is true that during the last season there was about one-half the average rainfall computed on the basis of the past two decades. Perhaps that fact has given rise to the number of letters that have been written to some of our Members. The truth of the matter is that the building of great highways through Florida—and it is threaded with them—has had a considerable effect on drainage. We are told by those who build roads that the first important thing that must be considered in the construction of roads is drainage; that the second important step is drainage; and that the third important objective is drainage. The other factors in road building will take care of themselves.

In building those highways in Florida, canals and side ditches will drain a vast number of acres. Thousands of acres of land in Florida are now being reforested by nature, where there used to be only sawgrass and other kinds of totally useless watergrass. Many portions of the State I had not been in for many years until I made my campaign in 1936, many areas during these years had grown up in beautiful pine trees and other trees, because, by the building of the roads, the land was drained to such an extent that useful trees could grow.

The geologists tell us that 500,000,000 gallons of pure, sparkling water flow out of Silver Spring, which sometimes has been referred to as Nature's eighth wonder of the world. All that water would flow into the canal, perhaps with a drop of 40 feet which could be utilized for generating electricity to light the canal from coast to coast. The same statement applies to Rainbow Springs, a few miles west, where water flows out of the ground at the rate of 400,000,000 gallons a day. Thus 900,000,000 gallons of sparkling water would flow into the canal daily. That would guarantee plenty of water for the operation of a lock canal, as has been stated by all the experts. Also guarantee that there could not be any intrusion of salt water from either the Gulf or the Atlantic, because the water would have to pile up first to let in water from the Gulf, and it would not do that. In fact, the engineers report that with the flowing of the water from the Oklawaha River, the Withlacoochee River, and the water which flows from these two springs there is not the slightest danger that there could be damages to the underground water supply in southern Florida.

For instance, if an underground channel were encountered in building the canal, in the first place the cavity could be sealed up if it would affect the water supply; and, if it were not sealed up, what kind of water would go into the cavity or channel? It would be the purest and the clearest water that comes out of Mother Earth. You can drop a dime into one of those springs to a depth of 80 or 100 feet and you can see the dime on the bottom about as clearly as you can a foot or two away. So if the water should get into the underground passage, what kind of water would there be in the underground water supply? I cannot imagine any purer water than that.

Many fine persons, some my best friends, have written me and insisted that the construction of this canal might interfere with the underground water supply—for instance, persons living in Sarasota, in Tampa, in Palm Beach, in Sanford, and in other communities. They give reasons for their views which are directly opposed to the opinions of experts, men who have devoted their lives and their experience to passing upon water sources and supplies for various cities. One of them serving on this board had charge of and solved the water problem for Palm Beach; also for Miami and several other cities in the State. He is a very noted geologist, indeed, one of the outstanding geologists in the United States. He has written his opinion in these official reports, not necessary for me to read here, in which he makes it quite clear to anyone with an open mind that the construction of the canal would not possibly interfere with the water supply in the southern Peninsula of Florida.

In much of the Florida Peninsula there is little or no surface drainage. The rain falls and stays there until it either evaporates or becomes a lake. That process has been going on for millions of years. In my own county of Orange there are over 650 lakes. There is a lake for each square mile. They are all lakes of pure water. It can be used for domestic purposes. The city of Orlando takes its water from a lake. Many other cities in Florida take their water from lakes.

We have but few muddy streams in southern Florida. A few of them are a little contaminated—for instance, the St. Johns—because of the dye which falls into the river from plants and weeds of different kinds; but there is no silt. There is no danger of any silt interfering with the portion of the canal in the St. Johns Basin, or the Oklawaha Basin, or the Withlacoochee Basin. There is no silt there now, and there will not be any if the canal is constructed. The upkeep will be very minor compared with other waterways.

Members of the House and the Senate have received letters advising that the construction of this canal would deleteriously affect the irrigation in their truck gardens and citrus groves. I owned one of something like 50 acres, from which I used to take approximately 25 to 30 cars of fruit each year. I have an irrigating system. The water for the irrigating system, however, comes out of a lake and not out of the ground. In fact, in the lakes there is found the purest, soft water, the kind of water that plants need, whereas if it comes from a great depth it is either sulfur water or water containing some other mineral that may not be best for the plants or trees which it is desired to irrigate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator finished upon that theme?

Mr. ANDREWS. Upon that particular theme, yes; but there are some other points to which I wish to call attention.

Mr. McNARY. Before the Senator reoccupies his seat, I want to discuss with him briefly and obtain from him his views on the question of a toll canal or a free canal. I do not wish to intrude upon the Senator at this time, however. I will linger until he is ready to discuss that phase of the subject.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the Senator. I should also like to say at this point that that is a matter which I have not thoroughly gone into. As the Senator knows, two amendments were offered yesterday covering the question of tolls. It may be that I shall want to file a short statement on that subject before we get through with the discussion; but if I cannot discuss it intelligently with the Senator, perhaps my colleague [Mr. PEPPER] can do so.

Mr. McNARY. I entertain no fear regarding the Senator's ability to discuss it.

Mr. ANDREWS. I do, as to that part of the matter.

Mr. McNARY. The reason why I mention the subject is that I am always anxious to have the Senator's judgment. During the hearings I asked General Summerall for his views on this matter. He appeared in behalf of the canal and its construction. It was my thought at that time, and it is now unless it is relieved, that the use of the canal and the tonnage passing through it would be greatly diminished by the exaction of a toll, which I think is the case today with the Panama Canal.

As I say, I do not want to divert the Senator's attention at this time. Later I should like to ask him a few questions along that line; but he may develop his own view, which I shall appreciate having.

Mr. ANDREWS. I shall be glad to answer the questions, if I can, at that time.

I desire now to conclude on this point by reading certain statements from the official reports.

I read from a report on geological and ground-water conditions in Florida, and their relation to the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal. This report is addressed to the district engineer, United States Engineers Office, Ocala, Fla. It was made July 21, 1936:

> In compliance with instructions, the board which you appointed on September 26, 1935, to study and report upon the effect which the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal at sea level will have upon the underground water resources of Florida, submits the following report:
> The board appointed consists of the following: Clarence E. Boesch, head engineer; Sidney Paige, senior geologist; Frank C. Carey, principal engineer; Edward B. Burwell, Jr., geologist; Malcolm Pirnie, consulting engineer of New York.

The third man was a private citizen. In other words, he was not an official of the Government or in the employ of the Government, as I understand.

> The board has studied all available information, which includes published and unpublished data obtained by former War Department boards which have studied the feasibility of a canal across Florida, extensive and valuable unpublished data obtained and compiled by the United States Geological Survey on the geology and ground water of Florida, published and unpublished data of the Florida State geological survey, special reports of and data gathered by Mr. Malcolm Pirnie, miscellaneous publications pertaining to the geology and water resources of the State, and data obtained by extensive borings and surveys and personal examination of important areas made upon the recommendation of this board.
> The data available so far fully justify the broad conclusions derived therefrom and expressed in this report.

This board is the only board that was ever appointed and which carried out its directions to determine what effect this canal would have upon the Peninsula of Florida so far as the underground water supply was concerned.

I shall now give some idea of the scope of the board's investigation. I read from page 426 of House Document 194, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session:

> The investigation, as carried out, has accomplished a threefold purpose: (1) The broad geological and ground-water conditions of the Peninsula of Florida are now understood; (2) sufficient data have been accumulated as to the ground-water conditions along the various routes to warrant the selection of the most desirable canal location; (3) sufficiently detailed investigations have been carried out along the selected route (13B) to appraise closely the general effects on ground water that may be expected from the excavation of a sea-level canal.

This report goes into detail, and gives every step taken by the board, everything that would bring information and knowledge to those who were engaged in this important work.

I shall now read their official summary of the effect a sea-level canal would have on the water table of Florida. This is taken from page 463 of House Document 194:

Any estimate of the distance to which effects of the canal cut will be felt north and south of the canal must take into account the impressive distances involved, the annual rainfall of 52 inches, and the flatness and immensity of the intake area. The southern high is 75 miles south of the canal—

As I stated before, that would place it in the vicinity of Lake Wales in Polk County, Osceola County, and Orange County—

The intervening region is known for its great area of swamps and lakes. It is exceedingly wet. The canal cut at the meridian of Silver Springs cannot on the average lower the water table more than 40 feet. It is not believed possible that this draw-down of 40 feet in a system where rainfall is continually being supplied along the gradient, can extend far south, before the upward curve of the water table slope will meet the present water-table elevation, and from this point south no effect will be noticed on the water-table elevations.

The conclusion is reached, based on considerations discussed at length above, that in the area between the dams on the Withlacoochee River and on Oklawaha River the effects of draw-down of the water table will not be appreciably noticed beyond a matter of 10 to 15 miles.

On page 464 of the same report the Board advises that—

The conclusion is, therefore, that heads at Daytona Beach will not be affected by the excavation of a sea-level canal.

At Daytona Beach and vicinity there are artesian wells, which flow all the time.

The farming area about Sanford is 50 miles from the nearest point on the canal. At Sanford artesian water is used in agricultural irrigation.

By the way, the water used in irrigation is sulphur water. I do not believe that water comes from under the Ocala limestone.

Between Sanford and the canal there extends the nose of a water-table ridge descending from an elevation of 130 feet, at a point 50 miles southwest of Sanford, to Lake George, 35 miles north-northwest of Sanford. The region to the west of Sanford for 40 miles is one of the wettest in central Florida, abounding in lakes and swamps, known as the lake region, and much of it an intake area of the open reservoir.

There are some conditions in central Florida respecting the water supply and water disposal about which many people seem to know little. Although the city of Orlando has a population of some 35,000 people, none of the sewage, ground water, nor the overflows from the streets goes out through any viaduct, drainage ditch, or river. It all flows into the middle of the earth. There are many very large drainage wells which are constructed to take care of the sewage and street water, and even the overflow of the lakes in Orlando, of which there are about 12 inside the city limits, is cared for by these drainage wells. We do not know where those waters go. We do know that the intake there is very great, for, in addition to the many buildings in the city of Orlando, we have a hundred miles of paved streets, and the lakes are kept at certain levels by the underground wells. During the recent winter there has been one of the worst droughts in decades; as I stated, there has been only about 50 percent of the average rainfall in central Florida this winter, and that percentage is figured by taking the average over a period of 20 years or more.

That the great southern water-table "high" can be reduced in elevation by the canal cut is regarded as impossible. No effects can be transmitted from the canal to Sanford by way of the Lake George depression area. The artesian heads at Sanford, therefore, cannot be affected by the construction of the canal.

I read that above-quoted portion of the report in regard to Sanford purposely, because many of the letters and protests concerning the construction of the canal have come from that vicinity.

The domestic water supplies of such cities as Jacksonville, Tampa, Palm Beach, or Miami will be unaffected by any changes in water-table level brought about by digging a sea-level canal.

The above is an unequivocal statement that is made by the board of five persons whose names I read a few moments ago, whose job and responsibility it was to determine that question not only as to Sanford but as to Tampa and as to the Sarasota vicinity. Many thousands of letters come to my office—and I imagine the same applies to my colleague from Florida—in favor of and against the canal, and one of my secretaries who handles those letters has learned, he tells me, that he can look at the postmark and tell whether a letter is for the canal or is against it. If it is written from Jacksonville, Palatka, Green Cove Springs, Ocala, Inverness, Clearwater, or Brooksville, he throws it over into the "for canal" pile. If it is written from Sanford, from Sarasota, from Palm Beach, or from Miami, it is thrown into the pile of those against the canal. So it depends on where one lives whether he is for or against the canal. The truth is that if the construction of the canal would be deleterious to any section, it would be in and around those cities along the route of the canal, and they are for it and have voted bonds for it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Can the Senator advise me which has the largest voting population, those for or those against the canal?

Mr. ANDREWS. In the State of Florida?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; in the "for" column or the "against" column. The Senator just stated the cities by name.

Mr. ANDREWS. I could not answer the Senator without looking the matter up carefully. I think possibly one would receive a great many more letters against any bill pending before Congress than for it.

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator misunderstood the nature of my inquiry. I asked about the voting population, whether there was a larger voting population in the column we will call "for" or in the column we will call "against."

Mr. ANDREWS. I could not answer the question unless the one issue were put directly to the people of Florida by referendum. When I ran for the Senate in 1936 the canal was being dug through the 29-mile section.

When I ran for the Senate in 1936, I put out a small folder, to the number of probably 150,000. One of the statements in the folder was that I was in favor of proceeding with the construction of the cross-State canal unless or until it developed that it would perceptibly and materially injure the underground water supply of southern Florida. As a matter of fact I made considerable study of the problem.

I was nominated in the primary and the vote I received south of the canal where damage was predicted was larger than the vote I received north of the canal where none was predicted.

Mr. McNARY. I think we are all very happy about the result as far as that goes. I know there is a division of sentiment among the people of the State of Florida, but I am curious to know where the majority lies, for or against the canal.

The Senator must have some knowledge on that subject from which to make a very fair estimate, and I ask the question in all good faith, because information has come to me in letters, and by personal verbal representation in some instances, that the majority of the people of Florida are opposed to the canal. Other information I have received is that the majority of the people of Florida are in favor of the construction of the canal. What is the judgment of the very able Senator from Florida in that respect?

Mr. ANDREWS. I shall be glad to state the facts to the Senator, and let the Senator arrive at his own conclusions.

Mr. McNARY. I shall be very happy to have the facts. I have not had any yet.

Mr. ANDREWS. For example, the present Governor of the State of Florida made the construction of the canal a direct issue. He spoke in every county in the State of Florida. Wherever he spoke the people knew he was in favor of construction of the canal. He received the largest vote any nominee for Governor of Florida ever received. He was elected by a great majority.

Mr. McNARY. What year was he a candidate?

Mr. ANDREWS. In 1936, the same year in which I was a candidate for the Senate. That was after the construction of the canal had been begun as a relief project.

Mr. McNARY. Did he receive a larger vote than the Senator received?

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not remember the exact figures.

Mr. McNARY. I do not want to impinge on the Senator's modesty.

Mr. ANDREWS. He won over 9 opponents in the primary. I believe he received 360,000 votes in the general election, while I received 348,000. I had a Republican opponent, a fine gentleman, and he received about 67,000 votes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator did exceedingly well.

Mr. ANDREWS. We do not mind having Republican opposition down there. Sometimes I think it is helpful.

I will also state that Representative HENDRICKS comes as our Representative in Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of Florida, in which I live. The canal traverses his district from east to west. In 1936 he made the canal an issue in every speech in his district, and I believe he had seven opponents. He was elected a Member of Congress by a large majority. He ran again last year stating he was for the canal, and he had no opposition. Some of his territory is in the section from which the Senator has received letters.

Mr. McNARY. From the so-called facts which have been stated to me by the able Senator from Florida, I must make the deduction logically that those who have run for office and made the canal an issue have been elected. The Senator has not cited to me any instance when a candidate for office was opposed to the canal. What I wanted was a direct statement as to whether the voting population of Florida is for or against the canal.

Mr. ANDREWS. If the Senator wants to know my honest judgment——

Mr. McNARY. That is what I want, and I have been trying to get it.

Mr. ANDREWS. I think I know my Florida. I ought to.

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator does. The only trouble I am having is to exact from the Senator a direct answer to my inquiry.

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not know what percentage, but at a guess I would say that 80 percent of the people of Florida, if they were to vote on the question tomorrow, would vote for the canal. The percentage in favor of the canal might be greater than that. The opposition to the canal from several of the localities, in my honest judgment, is not based on fear with respect to the water supply, because that fear has been largely dissipated. For what reason then could they oppose the canal?

In Florida we have jealousy between some of our larger cities, the same as in other sections of our country. We have three large cities. I do not think the commerce of Miami or the commerce of Tampa would be affected one iota by the construction of the canal. Those who are supposed to know tell me privately it will be of benefit to the shipping interests of Tampa, and the Board of Engineers say so in this report. I have not received any resolutions in opposition to the canal from the Chamber of Commerce of Tampa. I have received such resolutions from Winter Park, where there are many well-to-do retired residents. I understand that if one were to go down the street in Tampa and ask whether they are for or against the canal, one would probably find a very large majority in favor of the canal.

In the last 2 years there has been a great change in the sentiment with respect to the canal, not only in Florida but in all those portions of the United States.

I now desire to refer to the report of those to whom has been entrusted the task of furnishing information as to the benefit which would come from the construction of the cross-State canal with respect to national defense. The report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Report No. 509, refers to that matter briefly. I now wish to read to the Senate the opinion of those who heard much testimony in regard to that particular point. I read from page 8 of House Report No. 509, which was made on April 26, 1939, as follows:

> Notwithstanding the abundant economic justification of this canal, its military value, in emergency, will transcend its commercial value. In the event of war, with the theater of operations on either the Atlantic or Pacific coast, transportation problems of the Nation would involve the transport of immense quantities of troops, munitions, raw materials, and supplies from the region between the Alleghenies and the Rockies to either or both coasts. The experience in this regard of our World War participation demonstrates that peacetime facilities and equipment of the railroads cannot adequately meet such a demand. Gen. Charles P. Summerall, United States Army, retired, former Chief of Staff, has stated that the railroads alone cannot place and maintain an adequate army on either coast. A large part of this movement must necessarily be by water. The committee has had evidence presented to it which demonstrates conclusively that as a protected route for the movement of troops, munitions, and supplies between the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic seaboard, and as a safe alternate route to the Panama Canal, compared with the potentially hazardous route via the Windward Passage, ordinarily used, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal will serve as a major element of national defense in time of war.
> The following resolution was presented by the Mississippi Valley Association:
> "The security in time of war of the water-borne commerce of the Mississippi Valley, via the Gulf of Mexico, with the Atlantic seaboard is of deepest concern to the Nation. We, therefore, urge the completion of all channels for this commerce, which are recommended by the Chief of Engineers and designated by the Secretary of War as having important strategic value."
> In his letter to the chairman of the committee, the President has stated the military need for the canal.
> A communication to the chairman from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy under date of March 9, 1939, states:
> "It is the opinion of the Navy Department that by shortening the distance and providing an additional route for sea-going vessels between the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal would be of definite value during war in the shipment of necessary matériel for both military and commercial use, as well as for the passage of naval vessels if sufficient draft is provided.
> "The improvements of the St. Johns River, contemplated under the plans for the construction of the canal would contribute materially to the use of this location for the operation of naval seaplanes."

At this point I again state that the cross-State canal is not a Florida project. As I have previously stated, the canal has been advocated for more than a hundred years. The Constitution of Florida permits bonding the State for only two things. One is to repel invasion and the other is to aid in the construction of a cross-State canal. In 1935 the State of Florida was requested by the President to furnish the right-of-way to the zone through which the canal was proposed to be built. Up to that time the other portions of the United States signifying their interest in the construction of the canal, such as the great Mississippi Valley, did not have the right to dig the canal through Florida. Condemnation proceedings would have been required, and perhaps such a project might have met with resistance from the Florida property owners. So in 1935 the Legislature of Florida passed an act which provided for a bond issue for the purchase and transfer to the United States, without cost, a canal zone something like the Canal Zone in Panama.

The bond issue covered and pledged the six counties across which the canal was to be constructed, and it received about 90 percent of the vote. The people went to the polls and voted for the bond issue of $1,500,000 in good faith. They have already turned over much of the land to the Federal Government; and it seems to me there is an obligation on the part of the Federal Government to stand by their suggestion.

The length of the canal has often been mentioned as 175 or 180 miles. That seems a very long distance, but the first 85 miles or more is through the St. Johns River, which is practically an inland sea, approximately paralleling the Atlantic coast. The St. Johns River has often been spoken of as the majestic St. Johns. It is anywhere from one or two thousand feet to 3 or 4 or 5 miles wide. Ships can travel at full speed for much of the distance through the St. Johns River. It is a deep river and requires comparatively little dredging. Indeed, the canal would be constructed in river bottoms four-fifths of the way across the State; in fact, all the way except about 29 miles across the ridge west of Ocala.

Turning again to the report of the House committee, on page 9 I read:

Whatever may have been true in the past, there is no longer any room for doubt that the present and future key to the ultimate defense of the United States is the body of water comprised in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea. Our military policy is based upon the defense of our own territory. The success of that policy pivots upon our ability to prevent serious curtailment of the waterborne traffic now moving through the Panama Canal and the Straits of Florida. The eastern defense of the Panama Canal depends almost entirely on the ability of the Navy to close the Atlantic entrances to the Gulf and the Caribbean Sea. With the closing of these, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal would become a logical military necessity. The idea that naval engagements in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean are not contemplated, and therefore that this canal would not transit fighting craft can only be the result of an incomplete understanding of the situation and the military purposes which the canal would serve. Its primary function in the event of war would be the affording of a safe route for troops, munitions, supplies, and raw materials between the ports of the Gulf of Mexico and our eastern seaboard and between the latter and the Pacific Coast States via the Panama Canal. In the face of determined enemy opposition, the maintenance of this flow via the existing channels, i. e., the Straits of Florida and the Windward Passage, would be possible only at a cost in ships and men which would dwarf into insignificance the cost of the canal. It should be remembered that all of the very numerous islands lying immediately south and east of Florida are foreign possessions. The strategic location of these is such that should they be in enemy hands they would serve as bases for submarine and air attack on our shipping in the Straits of Florida, which would practically close that route. In such an event, the absence of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal might prove pivotal.

The Army and Navy Munitions Board, in a memorandum of recent date to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, has named those materials and supplies which it considers strategic, critical, and essential to the defensive efforts of the United States during war.

The materials are set forth in the report for the inspection of all those who doubt that assertion.

With the closing of the Atlantic openings into the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, all of these necessary materials could move with comparative safety and dispatch through the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal to our Atlantic seaboard.

The case of petroleum alone affords a striking example. Evidence submitted shows that more than one-half of the total petroleum reserves of the Nation are in the Gulf States, and of the remainder a large part is also directly tributary to this canal. Army engineer officers have pointed out the absolute necessity in time of war to safeguard the enormous ocean-going petroleum movement, upon which the Navy and a large part of our industries and public utilities are dependent and which now moves through the Straits of Florida. This could be moved through the canal to the Atlantic seaboard more quickly and with comparative safety from submarine attack.

This Government does not own the many islands across the Florida Straits from the mainland. From the upper windows of some of the hotels in Palm Beach on a clear day one can almost see Bimini, a part of the Bahama Islands. Many of the islands are not inhabited. They are islands upon which naval and war planes may land at any time on perfectly firm beaches without fear of danger.

We do not own the island of Cuba. We do not own the lands to the southwest of the Gulf of Mexico.

There are two strategic entrances into the Gulf of Mexico—Florida Straits and Yucatan Channel. The Gulf of Mexico is the Mediterranean of the United States. Mines could be laid in the Straits of Florida by foreign enemies without much danger, in the event of another great world war. Laying mines in the Straits of Yucatan, the only other entrance, is not beyond probability. In other words, in the event of another world war, the two entrances would be subject to enemy control.

Two or three years ago it perhaps would have been impossible to have provided plans for the great navy which has been authorized in recent months by the Congress. Three years ago such a plan and appropriation would have been impossible. Why? After the Great War we determined that we would not enter again into any war on foreign soil. It is my view and my belief that we are still of that opinion; but we have also learned another very important lesson. The conference called after the Great War to reduce armaments, and which met here in Washington, resulted in the drafting of a treaty for the reduction of armaments which was solemnly signed by all the great powers. Soon after that treaty was entered into, however, some of the governments that signed it began to arm secretly. They increased their armaments, and soon after they increased their armaments they began tearing up peace treaties. Treaties with dictators, we now learn, are nothing more nor less than "scraps of paper," and have often been referred to as such.

Italy is today ruled over virtually by a dictator. Both Germany and Italy have found it expedient in consummating their desire for additional territory to invade and take small countries that cannot help themselves. Japan has done the same thing in China. We have seen this going on now for a period of years. We do not know what to expect in Europe today or tomorrow or next year. We do know that there is a contest, and it is a contest between democracies and dictatorships. If the democracies of Europe should be overrun, and fall under dictatorships, as some of those democracies own islands to the southwest of the United States, naturally, the next blow for world power, with which at least two dictators in Europe seem to be obsessed, would fall in that direction; and it is not difficult to imagine what might happen. The Caribbean and not the Mediterranean perhaps would be the scene of the last naval battle of the world.

Under the Monroe Doctrine we must defend the republics to the south of us and to the southwest of us; we must undertake to aid in maintaining their territorial integrity as independent nations. The republics of the west may have to fight the nations of the east in order to maintain their independence and their democratic forms of government.

It is well that we should prepare in time of peace for what might happen in case of war. As a member of the Naval Affairs Committee I know there has been presented to us the question why we needed a billion dollars last year to provide a gigantic program for the Navy, in the interest of defense and not aggression or conquest.

It is also true that if the United States is ever unhappily to be the victim of a mass attack from foreign countries of the East, the chances are four or five to one that such attacks are going to come by air and from navies on the southeastern coast of the United States. They will come there because it is natural and logical. It is the most vulnerable spot for many reasons. No attack on the democracies of the western continent can be made so easily from any other point than from the Caribbean and the environment of the Caribbean.

So it is very important that the lifeblood of this Nation in time of war, flowing from the Gulf ports and Mississippi Valley should be safeguarded, and the best means and way of safeguarding the lifeblood of the Nation in time of war would be the completion of the cross-State canal in Florida. It does not require but little thought to realize the truth of that statement; it stands out as a matter of fact.

A short time ago we understood that the great naval fleet of the United States would take part in the opening of the World's Fair at New York on April 30. About 2 weeks before that time, however, a great portion of the Navy was ordered to the western coast. I, at least, have not yet learned why that was done; I have not even asked why that movement took place, but it was a demonstration of the fact that we need a formidable Navy in the Pacific and we also need one in the Atlantic.

We are dependent upon the Panama Canal for the interchange of our Navy from the Atlantic to the Pacific in time of war, depending upon whether an attack should come from the west or from the east. It is only an hour and thirty-five minutes by plane from some of those islands owned by European nations to the Panama Canal. Bomb-carrying airships could readily go that distance in a few hours, and probably destroy the Panama Canal. It is argued that the same thing might be said of the cross-State canal but the cross-State canal will be much better protected. One air base is located not very far away and we will have another in Puerto Rico. Of course that air base can be utilized in defending the Caribbean, in the first instance, and in preventing submarines and other naval vessels coming into the Caribbean.

We do not know what the ingenuity of man may bring forth tomorrow, but it has been said by men who are more capable of discussing such subjects than am I that the progress of man in the invention of machines and their application may ultimately destroy man. It has been predicted that the next war may be the last; that it will be the destruction of civilization. We feel very safe across the Atlantic Ocean; it is the greatest barrier to war against us. The broad expanse of the Atlantic stretches 2,300 miles from our coast. That barrier must be overcome to enable an attack on the United States from the east to meet with any degree of success. Nevertheless, during the Great War German submarines, I am told, sank 13 vessels of the Allies between Cape Hatteras and Cape Cod.

They were not reported at that time, for reasons which are now obvious. It would be absurd to say that submarines and mine layers cannot come across the Atlantic, or cannot use as a base the western coast of Africa, which is almost uninhabited, and then go the short distance from there across the Caribbean Sea, and do the same thing that was done in the World War. The death-dealing instruments which were used in the World War have been improved by inventions of every known variety, with the thought that they will be more efficient and will very much more quickly deal a death blow before resistance can be contemplated or offered.

On this point I desire to read the words of an expert, a man whose business it has been through a lifetime of training and experience to know what he is talking about:

> The value of the proposed canal "to national defense in time of war" was developed by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House in closed session, under testimony, I would recall, of General Summerall and one of the admirals. "Without undertaking to express with any authority my personal views as to the transit into and out of the Gulf of the major vessels of our Naval Establishment, I suggest, with complete disregard of that phase of naval strategy, that a predominant consideration as to our national defense should be the creation of a way alternate to the Caribbean route to and from the eastern seaboard for the 'life-blood of the Navy,' namely, fuel oil from Gulf ports."

It has been said that the larger naval vessels would not use the cross-State canal. Possibly some of the largest naval vessels, drawing 30 or 32 or 35 feet of water, would not use the cross-State canal when fully fueled and provisioned. Those vessels which are now being built are, in fact, floating fortresses. They are able, with their convoys, to defend themselves anywhere in the world. It would not be necessary for those vessels to go into the Gulf of Mexico. I do not know any special use that could be made of them in the Gulf of Mexico. All of the other vessels, the ones that do most of the fighting, could use the canal. In fact, the largest naval vessels could pass through by lightening their loads if they desired to pass from the Atlantic Ocean through the Panama Canal by means of a safe route.

Two of the very largest of the large tankers which are engaged in shipping oil to be used in the Navy and all over the world, and especially on the eastern seaboard of the United States, might not use the canal. Two of them, which I believe were referred to by General Markham, might not use the canal with a load, but they could use it going for an additional load; in other words, on the reverse trip.

There are so many phases involved and so many questions have been raised regarding the cross-State canal, that books would be required to contain all the information on the subject. In fact, many books have been written about it. As I stated in the beginning, the construction of this canal has been discussed for over a hundred years. Many resolutions and acts have been passed by Congress and by the Legislature of Florida looking toward the construction of a cross-State canal.

Florida has been asked to furnish the right-of-way. It voted a million and a half dollars for the purpose and is ready to furnish the right-of-way. In fact, it has already transferred to the Federal Government much of the right-of-way and is ready to transfer the remainder. It seems to me that Florida has performed its part; and in so saying I want to make it as clear that the cross-State canal is not a Florida project. Indeed, Florida cannot derive very great benefit from the cross-State canal. It would be a through highway; a national highway. The people to the west on the Gulf coast and the States of the Mississippi Valley will profit most by this short route. It is true that they will save only from about 20 to 24 hours by using the canal; but a saving of 20 to 24 hours means a great deal in the case of great cargoes that must be insured and are costing money each day in transit by way of insurance and interest.

It is also true that transit around the Florida Straits can be made with greater safety in recent years than formerly, because more lights have been established, and the danger spots are better known. That, however, does not alter the fact that the Straits of Florida are dangerous during the hurricane season, covering about 3 months during each year. Many vessels have gone on the rocks in that portion of the country. In fact, during the first century of the settlement of Key West, which once had a population of 24,000 persons, its people lived well by salvaging vessels that were wrecked on the coast of Cuba, and on the reefs in that portion of the Gulf of Mexico and in the Florida Straits.

It is reasonable to suppose that there will always be West Indian hurricanes. We can compute the saving of time that will result from the use of the cross-State canal as against the use of the Florida Straits as a channel for commerce; but that does not entirely cover the question. A saving of from 24 to 48 hours is a very important matter, as we all know who live in that part of the country, when there is a West India hurricane brewing off Puerto Rico. At such times all vessels within the Caribbean, off the coast of South America, in the Gulf of Mexico, and along the southern coast of the United States, are warned of the approach of the hurricane; and hour after hour they obtain information as to what direction the hurricane is taking and its velocity. The ships which are approaching the Straits of Florida anchor or go to places of safety, for their masters are afraid to make the transit around the southern part of Florida, because of the peril that they know they would or might encounter in undertaking to go through those straits in a storm.

I have not a memorandum at hand of how many vessels have reported damage. Usually, those which do not go on the reefs do not report the damage, nor publish how many hours or how many days they were forced to lower their speed in order to evade an approaching West Indian hurricane, or how many days they spent in harbors on the coast of the Gulf or the Atlantic, sometimes for 3 or 4 days, because they feared making the transit around the Florida Straits. If the cross-State canal were constructed, those conditions would not be encountered by the great traffic which goes from the eastern seaboard to the Gulf of Mexico. Ships could go through with safety.

A portion of the report made by the board which I read this morning refers specifically to the fact that where the canal enters from the Gulf of Mexico the mouth of the Withlacoochee River across to Jacksonville happens to be that portion of the State which is visited less frequently by West Indian hurricanes than any other part of Florida. In fact, the record shows that not within several decades has a West Indian hurricane disturbed or passed across the northern portion of the State where the canal is to be constructed, near Palatka, south of Jacksonville, and there has been only one hurricane in something like 30 years at the western terminus of the cross-State canal, there having been one during the past year.

Mr. President, the question of the economic value of the cross-State canal to transportation has been thoroughly discussed on this floor, and I shall not undertake to cover that phase of the issue.

It has been stated that shipowners engaged in shipping materials which come from the great Mississippi Valley to the Gulf coast would not use the canal. If one will read the history of canals, especially the history which covers the period preceding their construction, it will be found that there has always been opposition. For a great number of years there was opposition to the construction of the Panama Canal; and, as a matter of fact, a former President almost had to take the bit in his teeth, to use a slang term, in order to effect the construction of the Panama Canal. Today no one regrets that that was done.

Today no one regrets that the Cape Cod Canal was constructed. No one regrets that the canal connecting the Delaware Bay and the Chesapeake Bay was constructed. So far as I know, no one regrets that the Welland Canal was constructed. So the view of the shipowners perhaps should not govern us as to whether or not the canal would be economical. The fact is that the people who would be most greatly benefited by the canal are the farmers and those who produce commerce who live on the Gulf coast and in the great Mississippi Valley.

It might be interesting to note who is in favor of the canal. I think this list should have considerable weight. In the first place, President Franklin D. Roosevelt inherited this project from President Hoover of a former administration. Four or five hundred thousand dollars had been spent in an effort to determine just exactly where the canal should be constructed. Twenty-seven surveys have been made. No other project in the world has had such consideration in an effort to determine whether or not the right course was being pursued.

The Navy Department has endorsed it and is our constituted official authority, an authority which has to speak officially for all the people of the United States.

The War Department has expressed its approval. The Department of Commerce has stated that the commerce from the Mississippi Valley and the northern Gulf coast has increased 50 percent in the last 3 or 4 years, and it will undoubtedly continue to increase.

The project has been endorsed by the Governors of Alabama, Arizona, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Carolina, and Wyoming. The Mississippi Valley Association, which is composed of representative citizens, have endorsed it unequivocally, not once but every year for the past 6 years. They represent those who are most interested in the construction of the canal.

The Atlantic Deep Waterways Association has endorsed it. The Rivers and Harbors Congress has endorsed it.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I was interested in the statement the Senator made to the effect that 27 separate surveys had been made of a route for this canal over a series of years. I am wondering whether the Senator has any information as to what the source of the persistent pressure was for the building of a canal of this kind, which would be so insistent and so persistent as over a series of years to request and secure studies for 27 surveys.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, the only answer I can give is that Congress authorized it. I imagine the authority to do that came from Congress. There must be some virtue in it, and evidently there is, if former President Hoover, who is one of the greatest of engineers, I am told, should become interested in it and sign the bill appropriating $500,000 to make this investigation. It has been made from every standpoint, right and left, up and down, in every way possible.

The responsibility is not on Florida to see that the canal is dug. We are willing to have it dug. I personally was not willing to see it dug until I could be perfectly satisfied, by the evidence of persons who do know and ought to know, what the effect would be on the underground water supply. Since I have had that expert information, and have examined and cross-examined those giving it, privately and otherwise, I have come to the determination that that objection is not in the way.

This is not a Florida project any longer. The people of Florida in good faith bonded themselves for a million and a half dollars for the acquisition of the right-of-way, at the request of the United States Government. It is now a problem of the United States to dig the canal, and to take whatever course it desires, and to do whatever seems feasible.

The Intercoastal Waterways Association has endorsed this project several times. By referring to the maps on the wall it will be seen that the Intercoastal Waterway comes all the way from Maine down to Miami, and somewhat below Miami. The intercoastal waterway does not go all the way around to connect with the Appalachicola, where the intercoastal waterway practically stops.

The plan will be continued to complete the intercoastal waterway. At present there is no intercoastal waterway from Fort Myers up to Appalachicola. It is a long distance and a greater portion is unsafe for coastwise vessels.

By constructing the cross-State canal we thus connect the Atlantic intercoastal canal with the west coast and on to the mouth of the Rio Grande. It will be necessary, however, to construct a portion of the canal from Appalachicola to the mouth of the Withlacoochee River, which is not a very long distance. Many millions of dollars have been appropriated and spent to complete that intercoastal waterway. It is ultimately going to be completed. Here is where about 600 or 700 miles are sawed off by cutting across the State of Florida at the point where the canal is to be constructed. It seems to me that is a very strong point in favor of the canal.

Mr. President, I have one or two very important opinions with respect to the Florida ship canal which I will not take time to read. One is a reprint of an article by John L. Bogert, editor in chief of the Marine News, published in May 1937, on the subject The Mississippi Valley and the Florida Canal. I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. ANDREWS. I also ask to have inserted at the conclusion of my remarks a statement by Hon. A. J. Weaver, president, the Mississippi Valley Association, made before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, United States Army, at Washington, D. C., December 16, 1936.

Mr. ANDREWS. I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a statement by the Honorable John H. Small, vice president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association and former chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the Congress of the United States, before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, United States Army, Washington, D. C., December 16, 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit C.)

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to yield to me once more?

Mr. ANDREWS. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. I wonder if the Senator has information, in the light of experience with other canals, from which he takes assurance that there will be savings in transportation costs through the Florida canal, if it were dug, and if the anticipated savings resulted, that the savings would be passed on in lowered freight rates to the citizens of the Mississippi Valley to which the Senator has just referred.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I think that is inevitable.

Mr. GILLETTE. I would hardly agree with the Senator that it is inevitable, but in the light of experience is there reason to believe that it will be done?

Mr. ANDREWS. In the light of experience I think there is much hope that it would be done. The most serious problem which exists in the West today is the matter of freight rates.

Mr. GILLETTE. That is true.

Mr. ANDREWS. A cargo of grain can be carried from Brazil to Chicago at a cheaper rate than it can be carried from the State of Iowa unless the shipper happens to live on a waterway. That cargo can be shipped from Brazil to Chicago cheaper than it could possibly be shipped by railway.

The greatest problem the South is confronting today, and for over 50 years, is the discrimination against the South in the matter of freight rates. We have to pay something like 27 percent higher freight rates than are paid in what is called the "official territory" north of the Potomac; we have to pay that much more for transportation on commodities we have to ship than do shippers within that territory.

Indeed, we can hardly ship our produce to the north of the Ohio River; that is, into Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. We even speak of it in Florida as "prohibited territory." We want to see if there is not some solution of that problem, and the Florida canal will have a great bearing on that question. In my judgment, it will help the people of the West more than it will help Florida.

In the first place, there would be no use for railroads if there was not someone to produce something to put into the freight cars. The farmers, the mine owners, the oil producers, and the factories provide the freight. So we are deeply interested in providing much freight for the railroads, and we have been doing that for many years. We hope the Florida ship canal will be a link in the chain which will finally result in the South getting its just dues in the matter of freight rates.

Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that it has been estimated that the construction of the canal will cost from $168,000,000 to $198,000,000. The Congress of the United States has been appropriating two and three billion dollars a year for made work. Every country which has provided internal improvements has kept its people at home and has become great. In Holland, among other countries, we have an illustration of what I have just stated. When a country neglects its internal improvements it usually perishes from the earth. So it is that by constructing the canal we will not throw away any money. We will undoubtedly provide work for persons who are in need. We have been spending billions of dollars to do it. It would be wise to put money into permanent improvements, improvements such as the canal, for a thousand years to come. It is not bad policy to put our money into such improvements.

We will have to have steel from Alabama to provide for a great part of the work. Coal mines will have to furnish coal. The workers on the canal will eat cheese from Wisconsin. They will consume wheat raised in Kansas, Illinois, and other States of the North, because we grow no wheat in the South. Much of the food for the workers would come from those States which are north of us.

Trucks and tractors and automobiles used in connection with the work would come from Michigan. In Florida we have something like 400,000 automobiles now running on rubber. They cost more than $200,000,000. Three-fourths of that money was sent to Michigan to the great automobile factories. We paid the heavy tax that had to be paid on automobiles, but it did not stay in Florida; it went to Michigan.

We have contributed very largely to the success and growth of the great State of Michigan and other States.

We feel that the canal is not a project which will alone benefit Florida people. We can use relief labor on the canal. Why not? It may be a little more costly, but all the Members of the Senate will have to continue to provide funds for relief work unless we find some other solution of our unemployment problems, and we must find some other solution if we can.

In the meantime we should provide for internal improvements which have the recommendation of the authorities. I heard a prominent man say yesterday, "For God's sake, let us carry through the few canal, river, and harbor projects that are recommended by the Board of Army Engineers because they certainly recommend as few as possible." The Florida ship canal is one which is recommended by the United States Army engineers.

I thank Senators for their courtesy in listening to my remarks.

THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY AND THE FLORIDA CANAL

(Reprint of article by John L. Bogert, editor in chief Marine News, Marine News, issue May 1937)

ATLANTIC-GULF SHIP CANAL

(Florida canal)

Canal savings

Distance: Approximately one-fourth New York to New Orleans.

Time: Two and one-half days round trip New York to New Orleans. Two days round trip average all Gulf ports to United States Atlantic and European ports.

National advantages

(1) A shorter route for the Nation's water-borne commerce, totaling more than 67,000,000 tons annually, between the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

(2) An aid to the national defense in time of war.

(3) A safeguard to life and property from destructive hurricanes in the hazardous Straits of Florida.

(4) The completion of the vital link across Florida in the Nation's inland waterway system extending from New York to Mexico.

(5) Its benefits will increase with time and will accrue to a larger portion of our country and its population than those of almost any other Federal public work.

THE CASE FOR THE FLORIDA CANAL

(John L. Bogert, editor in chief, Marine News)

The Missouri, Mississippi, and Ohio Rivers, with their tributaries, constitute a chain of navigable waterways 15,000 miles long, but it is improbable that the time will ever come when 75 percent of these rivers will be navigable for vessels drawing more than 9 feet of water. Such being the case, barges, both self-propelled and towed, must constitute the bulk of that immense flotilla of freight carriers that can alone insure to the dwellers of our vast interior sufficiently low-cost transportation.

The Department of the Interior has issued a pamphlet which shows that many of our Middle West States, which were at one time the granary of the world, are now losing their inhabitants; and their farms, which were years ago the producers of great national wealth, are now being abandoned. High transportation costs will always arrest the growth in population of any land.

Montana, North Dakota, Wyoming, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas, are all seriously handicapped by the high cost of rail transportation. Congressman Pettengill, in a pamphlet entitled "Giving All Shippers an Even Break," makes the statement that in 1910, 38 percent of our people lived within 50 miles of salt water or the Great Lakes and in 1930 this percentage had grown to 45. Coupled with that he calls attention to the fact that two-thirds of our growth in population had taken place in that strip of 50 miles from salt water or from the shores of the Great Lakes.

If those figures prove anything, they prove that people cannot afford to stay anywhere where there is no cheap water transportation available. There is but one lesson to be learned from such figures, and that is the importance from a national standpoint of extending cheap water transportation throughout our interior. To fancy this natural drift to the shores of waterways can properly be arrested by abandoning the waterways and forcing into bankruptcy all transportation systems that utilize those same waterways is the height of absurdity. Cheap transportation means extended markets, and extended markets mean a higher standard of living.

It is easy to demonstrate from the history of the great State of New York that a perfectly adequate waterway paralleling a railroad, not only does not injure that railroad but builds it up and increases its earning capacity. There are three trunk lines that cross the State diagonally from New York to Buffalo with a mileage haul of about 436 miles. The New York Central paralleling the Hudson to Albany, and from Albany paralleling the New York State Barge Canal for its 340 miles to Buffalo, is several miles longer. Nevertheless, the New York Central has assisted in the building up of five cities of over 100,000 inhabitants, while Binghamton alone, of all the cities and towns on the Erie, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western and Lehigh Valley Railways has as much as 78,300. The conclusion is inescapable that cheap water transportation is absolutely essential for rapid growth in population.

Congressman Pettengill's figures don't begin to tell the tale so far as the State of New York goes: We understand that 85 percent of the entire population of New York is located within 10 miles of its great waterway route up the Hudson to Troy and thence to Buffalo. And Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Utica, Rome, Syracuse, Rochester are the prosperous, growing cities they are just because they are not at the mercy of "all the traffic will bear" railroad freight rates.

Suppose we contrast the happy fate of these prosperous cities with the melancholy fate of the grain growers of South Dakota. If we do, we will speedily discover ample reason why the farm population of the central West is shrinking. From Yankton, S. Dak., to Duluth, Minn., is but 424 miles by rail and the railroad charge is 15.9 cents per bushel of heavy grain, which, on the basis of 60 pounds to the bushel, would be closely 14 mills per ton-mile, or $5.93 for the ton haul. Now contrast that with what the railroads ask to haul that same bushel of wheat from Buffalo to New York—4 cents per bushel. The distance is 436 miles, so that rate per ton-mile is but 3.4 mills. Now if the railroads can afford to haul grain through the State of New York for 3.4 mills per ton-mile, what earthly right have they to ruin the poor farmer of the Dakotas by mulcting him 14 mills per ton-mile? Nevertheless, the Interstate Commerce Commission permits just such discrimination.

There is salvation for the western farmer, however, but it does not lie in any route through the Great Lakes; it lies down the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers. The Annual Report of the Inland Waterways Corporation for the year 1935 conclusively proves the possibility of a "downstream" rate for bulk cargoes as low or even lower than 1 mill per ton-mile. Therefore, the Yankton, S. Dak., farmer can have his heavy grain hauled down the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, 2,050 miles, to New Orleans, for 5.5 cents per bushel. That is but little more than one-third of what the railroads ask him to land it at the head of Lake Superior, 4,576 miles from Liverpool—to be exact, 10.4 cents less. Now, that 10.4 cents per bushel will go a long way to pay the cost of the ocean haul from New Orleans to Liverpool, a distance around through the Florida Straits of 5,266 statute miles.

It must be evident that every mile cut off this long haul will be a distinct benefit to the shipper; a saving of 400 statute miles (350 nautical miles) would reduce this ocean haul to 4,866 statute miles. At 1 mill per ton-mile 10.4 cents saving per bushel would pay for a haul of 3,882 miles. So down the Missouri River to its junction with the Mississippi River, thence down the Mississippi River to New Orleans, and from thence across Florida 15.9 cents per bushel would pay for the transportation of that South Dakota heavy grain to within 1,000 miles of Liverpool. Think of it, ponder over it, hauling heavy grain by water nearly 6,000 miles for the same price as is demanded by the railroads to haul it 424 miles. There is nothing extraordinary about hauling a bushel of grain 6,000 miles for 15.9 cents by a water route. The Argentinian, 7,178 miles away from Liverpool at Buenos Aires, has during the recent depression had his coal brought to him for 10 shillings per ton and his grain hauled back to Liverpool for 20 shillings per ton. Prices are higher now, but still well under a mill per ton-mile. In sailing vessels grain has been carried from Australia to Liverpool, 15,000 miles, for $6 per ton, or six-fifteenths of a mill per ton-mile. This compares very favorably with bulk-cargo haulage on the Great Lakes, where coal and grain have been carried for a little as three-eighths of a mill per ton-mile.

In view of the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors bearing date of February 24, 1937, which after advocating dimensions for the canal of "35 feet increased in the rock sections to 36 feet and 37 feet in the Atlantic and Gulf entrances, with a minimum width of 400 feet in the land cuts increased to 600 feet in open water," it seems pertinent to point out that it is perfectly possible to construct any canal of such excessive cross-section for the canal prism, that the visible traffic would be utterly inadequate to economically justify its construction. This the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors seems to have done.

Justification for the foregoing conclusion can be pointed out by considering the case of the St. Marys Canal on the Great Lakes. Here is a canal that passes the largest tonnage of any canal in the world—tonnage that carries cargoes at rates as low as any on any sea, lake, or river anywhere. Furthermore, the bulk cargo vessels that ply through this canal are of considerable length; the steamer Harry Coulby is 604 feet long, 65 feet beam, and 33 feet depth. Yet these vessels carry cargoes as large as 15,000 tons on less than 20-foot draft. At no time in the last 25 years has the recommended draft exceeded 21 feet.

There are no tankers as yet built that are as long as 600 feet; a standard size may be taken as 500 feet long, 68 feet beam, carrying 15,550 tons, on 30 feet draft. But it is perfectly possible to build tankers longer than 500 feet and drawing less water than 30 feet when fully loaded. The ratio of length to draft in our large trans-Atlantic passenger vessels is much greater than what obtains in the modern tanker. It can be taken as axiomatic that vessels will always be built to suit the canal locks they must traverse. So it must be obvious to anyone that General Markham is perfectly justified in restricting the cross section of the Florida canal prism to such dimensions as he feels the visible traffic warrants.

So far as the needs of vessels that can navigate the upper reaches of our inland waterways is concerned, a canal across Florida that will accommodate barges drawing but 8 feet of water fully loaded will meet their requirements, but no such limited draft would suffice for the trade that will use this most desirable waterway. With the deepening of the New York State Barge Canal, barges drawing 14 feet of water will be constructed in large numbers, and it would be folly to restrict the possible use of the canal to only river barges.

It seems pertinent to point out here that the tank trade is a one-way trade and that upon its return voyage south to the Gulf, in ballast, these tankers, which draw 30 feet fully loaded, will rarely draw more than 20 to 21 feet aft and but little more than half that forward. So the very largest tankers in ballast will never call for more than 25 to 30 feet.

There is one other advantage that inheres to the Florida canal route. As everyone knows, the Gulf Stream pours out through the Florida Straits at the rate of 3 to 3½ knots, and for a tanker to go south she must buck this same Gulf Stream. But below Hatteras there is a counterflow current close in to shore running south. So a direct course for Jacksonville would be favorable, while any course around the lower end of Florida would be against the current. It is, therefore, absurd to suppose that tankers will not use the Florida canal, when built, in any event, on their south-bound, in-ballast condition. There is a further reduction in fuel consumption when the speed is cut down in transiting the canal.

As every naval architect knows, the power needed is proportional to the cube of the speed, so that theoretically but one-eighth of the normal power is required when the speed is reduced one-half. While the mechanical losses of the propelling machinery remain nearly constant, so that the fuel consumption does not follow closely any such rule as one-eighth fuel consumption for one-half speed, it is nonetheless true that in transiting such a canal as the Florida canal a 15,000-dead-weight tanker might save 15 tons of fuel oil in a 24-hour passage owing to the reduction in speed.

It must always be borne in mind that the cutting of this canal across Florida will permit shoal-draught vessels that are utterly unsuited to ocean navigation to pass from the intracoastal waterways of the Gulf to those of the Atlantic. There are over 1,000 miles of these intracoastal waterways in the Gulf and 1,431 miles of them on the Atlantic: this canal will join them.

[EXHIBIT 2]

THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY NEEDS AND WANTS THE FLORIDA CANAL

[A statement by the Honorable A. J. Weaver, president, the Mississippi Valley Association, before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C., December 16, 1936]

STATEMENT OF ARTHUR J. WEAVER, ESQ., FORMER GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEBRASKA, AND PRESIDENT, MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ASSOCIATION, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. WEAVER. General Pillsbury and gentlemen of this Board, I deem it a privilege to appear at this hearing. I happened to be in Washington on other matters and learned of this hearing, and I am glad to be here.

For 12 years I have been intensely interested in the development of the inland waterways of the country, and because of my residence in Nebraska I have been particularly interested especially in the improvement of the Mississippi Valley, which includes the Missouri River section.

I have been president of the Missouri River Navigation Association for a great length of time and I am now president of the Mississippi Valley Association, an association whose membership embraces the representatives of 23 States.

We believe in the Mississippi Valley, and especially that part in which I live, that it is absolutely necessary for us to find an outlet by a cheaper process.

Our country has the longest haul and the highest freight rate of any great agricultural country in the world.

I checked our rates 2 years ago and I find that it costs to ship a bushel of grain from Omaha, interior Nebraska, to Louisiana and San Francisco by rail 34 cents a bushel, and to Seattle and Portland 33 cents a bushel.

Now, our country cannot go ahead on that basis.

So we have made a fight for a good many years for the development of the Missouri River. That channel is nearing completion, and with the great Fort Peck Reservoir, which will insure a 9-foot channel on that river from Yankton, Sioux City, down to the mouth and restore a 9-foot channel on the Mississippi River from St. Louis to Cairo, we think that our country will develop by putting industry by the side of agriculture.

Two years ago I talked to the manager of a dairy company, who told me that the rate on dairy products from a little factory near Omaha, canned milk, condensed milk, dry buttermilk, and other products, to the Atlantic seaboard and New York was $1.10 a hundred and Oregon and Washington shipped those products seven or eight thousand miles for 45 cents a hundred. Yet our country is a dairy country, a blue-grass country, naturally a dairy country.

There is a running stream of water spraying on each quarter section in that section of Nebraska in which I live.

We have an equable climate. We produce all the feed grains and we could build a dairy interest and make of it an industry if it were not for the hard times we have had in getting our products out. We just cannot compete.

The Pacific coast ships to New York and back to Chicago and our people cannot get the benefit of the Chicago market.

The only thing that will equalize this condition which was brought about, as far as that Midwest area is concerned, by the Panama Canal, which was in the interest of the whole Nation and a great national development and necessity, is to develop these great outlets so we will have a closer and cheaper connection with the Atlantic seaboard and, of course, through the canal, with the Pacific seaboard, and through the other ports, such as the recent opening of the Ohio River will afford, which will allow our section to take its products to Pittsburgh and to distribute them in the Northeast and to come to Chicago and to the lake cities and to trade with the Minneapolis, St. Paul, and other areas, and to bring farm machinery in that area, as well as other parts of that agricultural empire.

The Missouri Valley States alone present 80 percent of the food and grains of the United States, and those products, if we process and use them properly, must go to the other sections.

Six years ago, in 1930, in speaking in St. Louis before the Mississippi Valley Association, because I happened to hear a presentation of this part of the canal project then, I said in my extemporaneous remarks that it looked as though it were common sense to cut off that arm that runs down there several hundred miles and to give us closer and cheaper access to the Atlantic seaboard.

The Mississippi Valley Association in 1932 endorsed this project. It endorsed it again in 1933 and again in 1934 and again this year. That is an organization that was organized—and we just held the eighteenth annual convention—to promote the commerce of the Mississippi Valley and also to promote the commerce of the Nation through the Mississippi Valley, and I am sure that that canal, when it is constructed, if the engineers approve it—and we always have held that this project must be approved by the engineers, as we hold that all river and harbor projects must be approved by the Corps of Engineers—will be a great asset to this country and an asset of special value to the Mississippi Valley as well as to others.

The country where I live and the Northwest beyond that produced 400,000,000 bushels of exportable surplus. The East and Southeast, east of the Mississippi River, make up an area that has a shortage of 200,000,000 bushels.

The distribution of feed products can be equalized and helped by such projects as this.

This great system in the Mississippi Valley is not yet complete. Our 9-foot channel from St. Louis to Kansas City was just opened up a year ago last June and in the lowest water in history there was not a single weekly trip missed, possibly, and a 10-day average from St. Louis to Kansas City and return was maintained.

Our river will be improved to Omaha next year and to Sioux City the year after, and the Fort Peck Dam, which backs the Missouri back 180 miles, which is one of the great public works of the world and holds about 20,000,000 acre-feet of water, will make that Missouri River one of the most beautiful rivers and one of the most beautiful sights in the world, and it will put industry, because of the stability of the river, in the heart of our country. It will supply the deficiency and save the soils going down to the Gulf of Mexico, and we want this Florida ship canal.

The Mississippi Valley Association thinks that this Florida ship canal is a thing that is worthy and that it is really a part of the general development of our arteries of commerce which we are so greatly and vitally interested in.

We think when we get an average low-water flow by Sioux City of 30,000 cubic feet per second, in addition to taking care of the present 6,000,000 acres that have gone into irrigation in that Missouri River watershed and of the 4,000,000 more to ultimately go under irrigation, that we will have the greatest inland waterway system in the world, and we are sure it will help the railroads instead of injuring them.

Now, on this question of railroads: I point out the development which occurred on the Monongahela River. The railroads opposed that development. The railroads had a rate into Pittsburgh on coal that was $1.20 a ton, and the water rate is 19 cents. After they got cheap coal into Pittsburgh and after the Government built the Soo Lock in the St. Marie River and they saw they could get the cheap iron ore down over the Mesabi Range to meet the cheap coal at Pittsburgh, the waterway tonnage in the Pittsburgh districts from 1900 to 1925 increased 32,000,000 tons, and the railroad tonnage increased in that period 116,000,000 tons.

We have made a fight in our section for the waterways on the theory that they will help build the country.

There are only 26 people to the square mile in the Missouri River Valley. East of the Mississippi there are 100 and farther east there are from 250 to 300.

Commerce begets commerce.

You build this canal and give us a shorter route to the Atlantic seaboard, and it will make a saving to the people who produce the products in the way and to the people who consume them along that great area.

The only thing that will restore the balance of this country is to give every section an equal opportunity for its development. The rim of the country, from 1920 to 1930, the census during that period covered shows that 50 miles back from the ocean only one-seventh of the area of the United States had an increase in population of over 11,000,000 people; that increase represented over 60 percent of the increase in population of the whole country.

Our country has been standing still. We have been losing Congressmen. The north half of the Mississippi Valley and the northwest portion of it have lost about 16 Congressmen, and the development has been where they get these great waterways.

We will be a part of the Florida ship canal when it is completed.

We will be a part of the Mississippi River when the Missouri River is a navigable 9-foot channel to Sioux City, and we will be a part of the Illinois River and a part of the Great Lakes to the Gulf waterway, that great waterway that Abraham Lincoln envisioned years ago, and it will help every industry in that area and will not hurt the railroads but will build them, just like the Great Lakes system has built the railroads.

Where is there anyone that will contend that the Great Lakes system has injured the railroads? They have handled 93 percent of the traffic in two things, iron ore and coal. Those are raw materials and fuel, and that is what builds industry. The Interstate Commerce Commission reports will show that many of the most prosperous railroads this country has are the railroads belting the Great Lakes coming east from Chicago, because population and pay rolls follow industry.

This is just one step in our effort to save several hundred miles, effect more safety for transportation, and it is a step in the great system which is almost complete. You cannot judge this system yet. It has not had a chance to coordinate one great river development with another, but it is almost complete, and with the Fort Peck Reservoir it will insure that channel taking up the slack in that area from Sioux City on the Missouri clear down to the Gulf of Mexico, as I said, which, because of the 7-foot channel, in the extra-dry season, from St. Louis to Cairo, requires that. It is a development, and I am for this canal and this association is for it.

I would like to present for the record the resolutions passed by this association on this subject for the years 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936, and I give them to you. They are marked and can easily be inserted into your record, where I would like to have them.

I probably went far afield on some of this matter, but I only had short notice of the hearing and just happened to be in the city, and I want you to know that I do look on this development as logical, not only for the Mississippi Valley but for the whole country.

Brigadier General PILLSBURY. Thank you, sir; the resolutions will be made part of the record.

[EXHIBIT 3]

THE ATLANTIC STATES AND THE FLORIDA CANAL

[A statement by the Honorable John H. Small, vice president, the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, and former chairman, Rivers and Harbors Committee of the Congress of the United States, before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C., December 16, 1936]

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN H. SMALL, VICE PRESIDENT, ATLANTIC DEEPER WATERWAYS ASSOCIATION, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Mr. SMALL. General Pillsbury and members of the Board, the Honorable J. Hampton Moore, president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, had intended being present today, and in behalf of that association to express its endorsement of the project for a canal across the State of Florida. but a death in his family prevented it. He has requested me, as the vice president of the association, to attend in his stead and to express the approbation of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association of this project. At this stage I shall ask that a resolution of the association be included as part of my remarks:

"Florida canal: This association reaffirms its endorsement and support of a ship canal across Florida. We regret the failure of the Seventy-fourth Congress to provide funds for the continuation of the work already begun and urge that adequate appropriations be made to continue construction in accordance with the plans and recommendations of the Chief of Engineers."

The Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, it may be stated here, was organized in 1907, more than 25 years ago. At the beginning it expressed as its objective its purpose to endeavor to secure the approval of the engineers and the approval of Congress for the construction of the several links in an intracoastal waterway between Boston and Florida. To this, in a few years, it added as part of its objective a canal across the State of Florida, connecting the Atlantic Ocean with the Gulf of Mexico, and for this more than a quarter of a century that organization has—I think intelligently and I know with loyalty and persistence—advocated this project, and it is now complete from Boston to the Gulf of Mexico except for a few links—one across the State of New Jersey and one across the State of Florida.

I shall be brief in my presentation and bring to you only one or two fundamental thoughts:

If there is any proposition connected with inland transportation by water which has taken hold of the public mind, surely it is this: An intracoastal waterway along the Atlantic seaboard from Boston to Florida and thence across Florida to the Gulf of Mexico, from Florida along the straits of Mississippi and Alabama, to the Mississippi River, from the Mississippi River to the Rio Grande, along the Gulf of Mexico up the Mississippi to the Illinois, from the Illinois to the Lakes, from the Lakes again to Buffalo and the Hudson River, and thence a connection with the Atlantic intracoastal waterway.

Thirty years ago, when this proposition was conceived, its advocates were regarded as dreamers, as impractical, but that dream has not only been sufficiently converted into a reality but almost has been completed.

It seems superfluous that any necessity should exist to press upon those in authority the approval of the completion of the several links in this great chain of inland transportation.

If you hesitate to approve it, your successors will approve it. It cannot be stopped.

This entire improvement which I have just described is just as certain as the assembly of future Congresses, so why not do it now? Why not give those faithful servants who, unselfishly for years, have advocated this proposition which they believe to be in the public interest and which the American people believe to be in the public interest an opportunity of visualizing the approval by the engineers and the approval by the Congress of the several propositions which will complete this great system of inland transportation?

I am aware of some of the objections that have been urged to this waterway, some of which—and I have no reference, I beg you to believe, to the engineers, but to others—have been trivial, some of which have been selfish, some of which have been narrow, and some of which have, if you please, been even unpatriotic. I shall not refer to those except to emphasize the suggestion which I have made that the great work which has been so nearly completed shall have an end and shall be placed upon the map.

Gentlemen, there never has been a project in the field of economics, in the interest of the public welfare, which did not, to a certain degree, affect existing interests. Every new idea which has come into the world has conflicted with some existing idea, and each of us has lived long enough to have seen new thoughts which we ridiculed take their place in the realm of intelligence, in conception, and in reality. And so it has been with every project which had in it the elements of public service, the promotion of the public welfare.

No intelligent person would contend that the completion of this interior inland system of transportation would not affect existing instrumentalities of transportation. Of course, it will. But if that objection had prevailed during those last 300 or 400 years that we have lived through, we would today be as static as is China. It is because we have been tolerant of new ideas, it is because we have welcomed new projects which promoted the public welfare that we have advanced.

Of all persons, I would be the last to say a word in derogation of the railroads. I think in many instances they have been treated unfairly and I have been glad to see, from time to time, the rejuvenation of public sentiment in dealing with them fairly, but having a chance to exist and a fair opportunity to grow and to serve the public involves an entirely different proposition from opposition to something that is due simply because it will, in some degree, affect existing conditions, to wit, the railroads of the country.

Any person who would today advocate the abandonment of our important hard-surfaced highways and the scrapping of the motor vehicle would be laughed at, and yet we find highways and motor vehicles perhaps affected and changed more the conditions in our lives than any other innovation in recent years, and among their changes have been their effect upon the traffic of the railroads, much more serious in tonnage and value than that which would result by the construction of this great interior system of waterways transportation facilities.

The only thing for them to do is to say to the American people, "We recognize the advance of progress; we recognize that when a public improvement is demonstrated to be in the public welfare that it is going to be constructed and completed; and we shall simply accept the result and do our best to mend the broken places and continue our function as one of the great instrumentalities of transportation in the United States"; and our railroads are, and I believe always will be, one of the great instrumentalities of transportation in the United States.

So, gentlemen, I shall not detain you further.

Speaking for the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, whose membership extends from Massachusetts—yea, even Maine—to Florida, composed of men and women who have dedicated a part of themselves to the public service, I ask you to give approval to this great project of a canal across the State of Florida.

Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Andrews	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Bailey	George	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Gerry	Lucas	Slattery
Barkley	Gibson	Lundeen	Smathers
Bilbo	Gillette	McKellar	Stewart
Bone	Glass	McNary	Taft
Borah	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Tobey
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Truman
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Nye	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hill	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Chavez	Holman	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Pittman	Wiley
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reed
Davis	King	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 3:30 today the Senate proceed to vote on the bill and all the amendments thereto to final passage.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I suggest that the hour be specifically fixed so that Senators may make their plans accordingly?

Mr. BARKLEY. I said not later than 3:30. I am willing to amend the request by definitely making it 3:30.

Mr. VANDENBERG. With the understanding that all absent Senators have been paired, I have no objection to the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the call for a quorum required by the rule will be dispensed with.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise to ask what the request was.

Mr. BARKLEY. The request was that the Senate vote on the bill and all amendments at 3:30 o'clock today.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, was the agreement entered into?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is a pending amendment. In that connection, I wish to make a comment or two in reference to the main bill.

When the Florida ship canal bill was previously before the Senate I voted against it. I have endeavored this time to approach the question with an open mind. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] suggested that I read the hearings. I have read the entire hearings. I have either listened to or read all the speeches which have been made on the floor of the Senate in reference to the bill.

It seems to me that a fundamental principle which should apply to all such projects is that anyone who comes before the Senate asking for a great appropriation has the burden of proof to establish the advisability and the desirability of the appropriation. That is a procedure with which lawyers are familiar; and I think the same obligation rests upon the proponents of the ship canal; that is, they should establish to the satisfaction, and almost to the conviction, of the Senate that from a national standpoint the project should be constructed.

I have gone into the matter of the burden of proof, and I find that the people of the State of Florida are divided. There is more bitter opposition to the bill from the people of Florida than from the people in any other section of the United States. That is, there is a division. I do not pretend to know the percentages. I understand from the record that two Members of the House from Florida are against the project and three are for it. We find unanimity and harmony only between the two Senators from Florida.

The engineers are divided. I believe the statement was made on the floor of the Senate that of the engineers who have studied the project, a substantial preponderance in number have been opposed to the canal. In any event, the engineers have been and are divided. We have reports for it and we have reports against it.

The Senate committee, which heard all the testimony and examined the witnesses, is divided. A majority of the Senate committee are opposed to the passage of the bill. It was reported to the Senate without recommendation; but I understand that an actual majority would have voted against a favorable report had the matter been submitted to the committee. If I am in error in these statements, I want to be corrected. The shippers who are concerned are, at best, divided. Two statements have been made as to the hearings before the committee. One is that no shipper appeared before the committee to oppose the canal, and the other is that no shipper appeared before the committee to support it. Letters, which were read into the record by the Senator from Michigan, convinced me that the major portion of the shippers were not friendly to the canal. I am merely saying that, from the standpoint of maintaining the burden of proof, I think the proponents of the bill have failed. The State of Florida is divided; the engineers are divided; the Senate committee is divided; the shippers are divided; and yet upon this divided sentiment we are asked to inaugurate the construction of a project the minimum cost of which is figured to $197,000,000, but which, I venture to say, from experience with engineers and knowledge of other projects, will cost nearer $400,000,000 than it will $197,000,000 when it is completed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In view of the limitation of time, I do not wish to consume more than a moment; but I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if it is not a fact that, in addition to what he has said, there is an essential divergence, in fact, a fatal divergence, as we say in drawing a petition for a lawsuit, between the recommendation of the President of the United States in his letter to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, and the measure now before the Senate, because in that letter the President said:

> This canal will, according to the engineers, receive in tolls enough revenue to pay for its upkeep and over a period of years to amortize its cost, though it is doubtful that these revenues would take care of accumulated interest charges.

That matter was brought up in the Senate committee, and General Summerall, who was the star witness for the proponents of the measure, testified that it was not contemplated under the bill now pending before the Senate to impose tolls to reimburse the Government for its expenditures on the canal. Therefore, I submit that there is a very fatal divergence between the recommendation of the President of the United States and the measure now before the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. I will go further than that. That divergency exists, but, as I have read the record, with the exception of the two Senators from Florida, there is divergence all down the line. I have found no divergence which the Senators from Florida have cleared up effectively. While I have under my eye one of the Senators from Florida, I wish to say that I think never before in the Senate have I seen more effective work accomplished by Senators than has been accomplished by the two Senators from Florida. I do not believe that when the bill came into the Senate there were a dozen Senators in favor of the canal on its own merits, but the Senators from Florida, by diligence, by persuasion, and because of the personal affection in which they are held by other Senators, now feel that there is a chance to carry the measure.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Colorado if he has ever heard any reference to such a thing as "damning with faint praise"?

Mr. ADAMS. Well, that is the last thing I would do to the Senator from Florida. If I were advocating a project, I think I would want the Senator on my side, because, from the standpoint of efficiency in getting votes for a project that had so little support upon its merits in the Senate, I have never seen the effort equaled. It is a mark of the affection which many Senators hold for the two Senators from Florida that there is now greater support for the measure. I will not detail further the reasons, but I mean what I have said to be great praise.

Mr. President, I am interested in this question from the same standpoint that I have argued some other matters in the Senate. We have in this country today a debt of over $40,000,000,000. We have been accumulating a deficit of $4,000,000,000 a year. That the growing debt and the continuing deficits are dangerous to the country I think there are few who will deny. I would not oppose an appropriation for an expenditure emergent in character for the immediate welfare of the public of the United States, but I am unable to find anything of an emergent character in the Florida ship canal.

The President in his message looks forward to the construction of the canal within 10 or 15 years. Any emergency will have long since passed when the 10 or 15 years shall have elapsed and we will then have had the answer to the program of extravagance and great expenditure on which we are now embarked.

I stood on the floor and was one of a majority of Senators who voted to cut down the requested appropriation for relief of the needy and unemployed. I only speak for myself, but I could not possibly vote to appropriate or to involve our Government in an expenditure of from two hundred to four hundred million dollars, having voted to take $150,000,000 from the relief appropriation first requested, and when the additional request was made having urged upon the floor a reduction in the second relief appropriation of $50,000,000. I could not say that I am willing to take the hazard of denying relief appropriations asked by the President and yet willing to start an expenditure unknown in amount, disputed as to its benefits, and lacking entirely in emergent character.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Gladly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will permit me to make merely one observation in his time it will be my only intrusion upon the limitation.

I anticipate that when the tolls provision is put into this bill it will then be urged that the cost of the canal will cease to be a charge upon the public credit and that it will liquidate itself. I simply wish to state to the Senator that we cannot make a project self-liquidating by simply calling it such. If ship operators, as I have clearly demonstrated, will not use the canal when it is free, they certainly are not going to pay to use it. Therefore, the provision for tolls does not make it self-liquidating; it merely camouflages it for the purpose of getting easier votes. You cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has very clearly stated the situation. It does not matter what provision we put into the law as to tolls, if the canal itself will not justify the collection of tolls no tolls will be paid. When the canal is completed, if the shipping does not use it because of tolls, Congress will very promptly take off the tolls because we will not leave a great canal to be idle if it has any virtue. So the tolls provision does not meet the problem.

Mr. President, there are certain facts which stand out. There will be some damage to underground water supplies. Witnesses differ as to how great the damage will be. That, however, is not a matter which has concerned me. I have been concerned with the gross expenditure for a debatable project. The United States is to pay the cost, and if there is any benefit, shippers and ships will get the saving. It is stated—and I am hurrying along because the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is anxious to take the floor—that the maximum saving will be 15 cents per ton. I hope that may be so.

The military benefits have been stressed. Who is going to make war against us? Against whom do we propose to make war? I know of no nation that contemplates war upon the United States; I know of no nation against whom we propose to make war; and if we do propose to make war, of what effect and of what benefit will a canal be that will be constructed 6 years or 10 years or 15 years from now? So far as the military factors are concerned, if we build the canal, and if it is useful, we will have simply obligated ourselves to another grossly expensive undertaking to defend the new canal.

I cannot imagine a ship willingly in time of war going through a tortuous channel 200 miles long instead of traveling the open seas; and if the progress in the improvement of bombers continues, the Florida ship canal would not last 2 weeks after war was declared. One bomb at any point of the 200 miles would destroy the usefulness of the Florida ship canal.

We are told that it would be of advantage to the Navy, but battleships could not use it. If so, it would be necessary to separate the battleships from the other vessels; and the battleships would be without their defending flotilla around the straits of Florida. I have not been impressed with that argument.

The Senator from Florida is watching the clock and listening to me at the same time.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ADAMS. I do. I will answer the question if I can.

Mr. ANDREWS. I heard the Senator use the expression "tortuous canal." That is the first time I ever heard the canal referred to in that way. I am wondering how it is possible for a canal of that kind to be tortuous when the first 85 miles of it, at least, is almost an inland sea, and it is one of the straightest canals ever proposed, 33 feet deep and 400 feet wide. How could it be tortuous?

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw that term. It is the longest canal ever projected in the world. It is relatively narrow. Of course, 400 feet is a substantial width; and I do not mean that it is a narrow, winding canal. I merely mean that from the standpoint of passing traffic it is narrow, and there are curves in it.

Mr. President, it is not claimed that the construction of this canal would increase the traffic. It could not do so. As I see it, in this matter Congress is on trial, as Congress has been on trial in all matters affecting the expenditure of Government money. When I say "Congress," I mean Congress. It is idle, it is unfair, to charge the President of the United States with responsibility for debts and deficits. The Constitution of the United States, following the precedent of English history, placed in Congress the power of the purse.

If the progress of the country is wrecked by reckless expenditures, by continuing deficits, by great debts, it is the Congress that is responsible for it. When, under the present financial situation of the land, Senators vote to impose an obligation which, in my judgment, will run to $400,000,000, and which will involve an annual cost of over $10,000,000 for maintenance and for interest, to say nothing of amortization, I think, in the face of the existing emergencies, that Congress and individual Senators must be responsible. So if Congress does not restrict its spending, the disaster to the country is inevitable; and of all the expenditures which we are asked to make, the Florida ship canal is the one above all others lacking emergency character. It may be postponed. We do not need to pass upon the ultimate merits of the Florida ship canal; but I say to the Senate we have no right to undertake its construction at this time, to obligate ourselves in a time of financial stress, when the questions of benefit are so disputed and when, as I have said, the burden of proof has not been met.

As a last word, I think we have been looking for a pick-up in business. Business is looking to Congress. One of the things that has held business down has been a lack of confidence on the part of the business of the United States in the course Congress has been taking. This is a chance for Congress to say to business, "Congress is concerned with expenditures and with debts," or to say to business, "Congress never can say 'no' to an expenditure when a strong appeal is made to us." I am hoping that Congress by its vote will justify a feeling of confidence as to its financial intentions.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Colorado takes his seat will he make a brief explanation of his amendment which is now pending before the Senate?

Mr. ADAMS. An amendment was offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] which provided that the President should cause to be made—

> A study for the purpose of determining the rates of toll which it will be necessary to levy on the various classes of vessels transiting the canal * * * for the purpose of providing for the maintenance and operation of such canal and for the amortization * * * of the capital cost.

And that a table setting out such rates of toll should be transmitted to Congress prior to the completion of the canal. The amendment then provided that until otherwise provided by law, the rates of tolls set out in the table furnished by the President should be binding. The amendment I suggested provided that the study should be made before resumption of construction of the canal rather than afterward.

Mr. PEPPER. In other words, if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado should prevail, before any appropriation would be made by the Congress the report from the President about the adequacy and sufficiency of the toll structure would be before the Congress?

Mr. ADAMS. That is the intention.

Mr. PEPPER. That is the question before the Senate. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. Is it contemplated that the bill will go through, and the money will be impounded, before the tolls are ascertained under the amendment of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that the amendment is not mine. The amendment is that of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE]. I merely endeavored, if I may so phrase it, to improve a bad amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand; but what would happen to the remainder of the bill if the amendment should be adopted?

Mr. ADAMS. Congress would be authorized by the bill, if passed, to make appropriations.

Mr. PEPPER. But no appropriation would be made until the Congress had before it the information from the President which is called for by the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to get into this argument at this late hour; but it seems to me we are authorizing something and then saying that before it goes into effect we ought to have additional information. If that argument is sound, certainly we ought not to authorize the construction of the canal until we have the additional information. Logically stated, we are either for the authorization without the information, or we ought to get the information before we make the authorization, one of the two. We ought not to make the authorization and then turn around and say, "But we want additional information before the Appropriations Committee recommends the appropriation of any money"; for no sooner would the authorization be enacted into law than pressure would be put on Congress, since we had authorized it, to appropriate the money without a report.

While I am on my feet I wish to say that I have no reason to oppose the Florida canal. It seems to have a great deal of merit; no doubt a pretty good case can be made out for it, and, as a personal matter, I should like to go along with the Senators from Florida. But with a $40,000,000,000 deficit and with three or four billion dollars to be added to the deficit this year—the fifth or sixth or seventh year of large annual deficits—in my opinion the good that would come to shipping from the construction of the canal would not be a drop in the bucket to the harm that is being done the entire country by constantly appropriating money which we have not got and which, up to now, Congress has shown no disposition to get.

Reluctantly I am going to vote against the authorization, even with the Lee amendment; but I feel that if we are going to authorize the construction of the canal, the Lee amendment is not worth a snap of the finger; and if the Lee amendment is to have any effect, we ought to have the information called for by the amendment prior to the passage of the authorization.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator who has the floor yield to me for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be delighted to yield to the Senator if I can answer his question.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand the Adams amendment, the effect of it, if adopted is that in making appropriations hereafter to carry out this authorization over a period of years, or from year to year as, of course, it would be, the Appropriations Committee would consider the information called for under the amendment, and probably would take no action until it was received. Of course, they could do that anyway. The Appropriations Committee could refrain from recommending appropriations for carrying out an authorization until the committee obtained whatever information it wanted, from whatever source it could obtain it.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So really this amendment does nothing more than create a sort of moral obligation on the part of the Appropriations Committee and also the Congress not to appropriate the money authorized by the bill until certain information is available, which the Appropriations Committee could do anyway.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me develop for just a second the point of view of the Senator from Kentucky. Assuming, for the sake of the argument, that the information would be adverse to carrying out the authorization of the bill, and assuming that when we got the information it would show that we never ought to appropriate a nickel to carry out the authorization of the bill, why in the world should we authorize something which subsequent facts may show we never ought to have authorized at all? If that is a point at issue, if it is going to determine the course of Members in supporting or opposing the measure, the logical thing to do is to have the money first.

I am going to desist now, because I think the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] ought to have the privilege of closing the debate.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I find myself in a very embarrassing situation. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and I anticipated that no new remarks would be made upon the subject. While we have profited by the remarks which have been made by the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], I had hoped to say a few things, and then the Senator from Kentucky was going to conclude the debate. So as the result of the unexpected entry into the discussion of the Senators from Maryland and Colorado, I have only 1 minute available now if the Senator from Kentucky is to be given even 5 minutes in which to make his remarks.

I shall just say this, therefore, as a summary of our position:

The Chief of Engineers has recommended favorably to the Congress the construction of the Florida ship canal, and the Corps of Engineers is the agency which Congress has designated as the one to pass upon such projects.

The Department of Commerce of the United States has favorably recommended the project. The Navy Department has recommended it. The President of the United States has favorably recommended it. The House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, after two hearings upon the subject, has favorably recommended it, and there is a bill on the subject on the calendar of the House.

As a river and harbor project this project stands approved before the Congress, and if we are to deal with it as we have dealt with other river and harbor projects it is entitled to the support of the Congress when the engineers of the United States Army have given their approval and recommendation to it. Therefore we do not have to come here asking for a toll canal. We come here to ask justice from our colleagues because of the favorable recommendation to the Congress by its own agency—the engineers. But in view of the present condition of the Treasury, which is disturbing to some, to show good faith, and to show assurance that the canal is economically sound, we are willing to acquiesce, as we now do, in the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. We say that we will not appear before any Appropriations Committee, that no one will make application for an appropriation of money to begin the construction of the canal until an additional survey may be made by an agency designated by the President, which will show affirmatively that it will be a self-liquidating project.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I voted against this project on the previous occasion when it was before the Senate, but at that time there was no provision for an investigation as to the practicability of the canal or as to the revenues to be derived from tolls. It is to be an artificial canal, like the Panama Canal, and I must say that I am not sufficiently well informed as to its economic justification because of the conflict of opinion in the matter.

If I understand the position of the Senator, there is before us an authorization requiring an investigation to determine what may be the possible use of the canal, and the rates, and the possible revenue, with a view to determining whether or not the revenues will liquidate the project and pay back the money invested.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Am I correct in assuming that unless such an investigation shall be made, and the evidence shows that the canal will be used, and that the revenues will within a period of years liquidate the investment, it will then be for the Congress to determine whether or not they will appropriate the money to complete the project?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is correct. So I appeal to my colleagues whether any fairer proposition could be made, and whether the Congress could have any greater safeguard than is furnished, because Congress will not permit itself to do anything which subsequent investigation and assurance may not show to the Congress to be economically justified.

I desire now to yield the remaining time to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I cannot deal with this important subject in 2 minutes. I had intended to make a few remarks upon the construction of the proposed canal purely from the standpoint of national defense, not that it may not be justified from the standpoint of commerce.

I voted for the canal bill originally without knowing much about it. I did so very largely because of my great affection for and deference to the former Senators from Florida, Senator Fletcher and Senator Trammell. I have since learned more about the subject, and I feel that if I had time I could defend the canal on its merits. But I have not the time, and about all I can say in the few minutes at my disposal is that I expect to vote for the pending measure, because I believe the canal can be justified commercially, as much so as any of the other canals we have constructed or bought, including the Cape Cod Canal, which the Government bought some years ago. That canal may not have been a financial success so far as repaying the Treasury all that was expended in its purchase and maintenance is concerned, but it certainly has been of infinite value to the shipping interests of the Atlantic seaboard.

I realize that it may be fantastic to anticipate any sort of war, but there have been wars, and probably there will be others, and there is no way to anticipate or designate who our enemy may be in the future. Looking at the map on the wall, taking into consideration the chain of islands running from Florida down to the coast of South America and reflecting that probably more than 50 percent of our raw materials must come from regions contiguous to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Southern States and from Central and South America, and must reach the industrial centers on the Atlantic seaboard, it is easy to understand that if a condition existed which made it impossible or difficult for us to send our commerce or our men or our ships to the islands and countries to the south the Florida ship canal would certainly be of great value from the standpoint of national defense. For that reason I expect to vote for the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bulow	Downey	Harrison
Andrews	Burke	Ellender	Hatch
Ashurst	Byrnes	Frazier	Hayden
Bailey	Capper	George	Herring
Barbour	Caraway	Gerry	Hill
Barkley	Chavez	Gibson	Holman
Bilbo	Clark, Idaho	Gillette	Hughes
Bone	Clark, Mo.	Green	Johnson, Calif.
Borah	Connally	Guffey	Johnson, Colo.
Bridges	Danaher	Gurney	King
Brown	Davis	Hale	La Follette

Lee	Murray	Russell	Tobey
Lodge	Neely	Schwartz	Townsend
Logan	Norris	Schwellenbach	Truman
Lucas	Nye	Sheppard	Tydings
Lundeen	O'Mahoney	Shipstead	Vandenberg
McKellar	Overton	Slattery	Van Nuys
McNary	Pepper	Smathers	Wagner
Mead	Pittman	Stewart	Walsh
Miller	Radcliffe	Taft	Wheeler
Minton	Reed	Thomas, Utah	Wiley

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add, after line 8 on page 2 of the bill, a new section, to read as follows:

The canal shall be known and designated as the "Duncan Fletcher Florida Ship Canal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HILL (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY]. I am advised that if the Senator from Alabama were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "yea," and if the Senator from Connecticut were present he would vote "nay." Both Senators are absent on important official business.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. If the Senator from Virginia were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote on this question I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], who is absent on important business. If he were present, he would vote "nay" on this question. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair on this question with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I therefore withdraw my vote. If the Senator from Virginia were present, I understand he would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is absent on the business of the Senate, has a pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. If the Senator from Nevada were present, he would vote "yea," and if the Senator from Vermont were present he would vote "nay."

I also announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. If the Senator from Maine were present, he would vote "nay," and I am advised that if the Senator from North Carolina were present he would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who is detained on official business, is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. The Senator from Oklahoma, if present and at liberty to vote, would vote "yea," and the Senator from South Carolina, if present, would vote "nay."

I announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent on official business for the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] is delivering a commencement day address in West Virginia, and is therefore necessarily detained.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senators from Virginia [Mr. GLASS and Mr. BYRD], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] has been called to his home State on public business.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 45, as follows:

So the bill S. 1100 was not passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6149, making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has moved that the Senate consider what is known as the Navy appropriation bill. I have no objection to the bill being made the unfinished business, providing we have the understanding that the bill will not be considered until tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has to be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BYRNES. That is understood, Mr. President. I shall make that proposal now.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the understanding that the bill shall merely be made the unfinished business, and that further consideration of it shall go over until tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNES. That is the understanding. I think the Senator from Oregon will have no objection if I move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 6149, making appropriations for the Navy Department.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROGRAM FOR REMAINDER OF WEEK

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators, many of whom have inquired about the program for the remainder of the week, I wish to say that following the consideration of the bill which has just been made the unfinished business, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] desires to have taken up for consideration Senate bill 2009, one of the railroad bills which has been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Whether that bill will be taken up and made the unfinished business this week or put over until Monday may depend upon the length of time consumed in the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, but the railroad bill will follow the naval appropriation bill, according to the present program.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In connection with the statement of the majority leader, I think it is only fair to say that when the railroad bill referred to by him is brought before the Senate for consideration, that is, when the motion is made to consider it, by direction of the Committee on Commerce a motion will be made to refer that bill to the Committee on Commerce for the consideration of the features of the bill properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. That question will arise when the motion is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CONNALLY (for Mr. BURKE), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Walter A. Huxman, of Kansas, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, vice Robert L. Williams, retired.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported favorably the nomination of William M. Leiserson, of Ohio, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for a term of 5 years from August 27, 1938, vice Donald Wakefield Smith, term expired.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

POSTMASTER, WILMINGTON, CALIF.—DORTHA MAE ROBERTS

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report adversely the nomination of Dortha Mae Roberts to be postmaster at Wilmington, Calif., the junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] having certified that the appointment would be personally objectionable to him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Simon Hellenthal to be United States district judge for division No. 3, District of Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Eli H. Brown, 3d, to be United States attorney for the western district of Kentucky.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George L. Grobe to be United States attorney for the western district of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph T. Votava to be United States attorney for the district of Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John J. Boyle to be United States attorney for the western district of Wisconsin.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John M. Moore to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Kentucky.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Loomis E. Cranor to be United States marshal for the western district of Kentucky.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John G. Utterback to be United States marshal for the district of Maine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Stephen J. Doyle to be United States marshal for the district of North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John J. Barc to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John J. Farrell to be United States marshal for the district of Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE—NORMAN ARMOUR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Norman Armour to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to Argentina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Armour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY—EDWARD H. FOLEY, JR.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edward H. Foley, Jr., to be General Counsel for the Department of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Foley.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the request of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], I ask that the nomination of Margaret E. Mahling to be postmaster at Randall, Minn., and the nomination of Morten G. Pedersen to be postmaster at Tyler, Minn., be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that all other nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, all other nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY—WALTER A. HUXMAN

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the nomination of Walter A. Huxman, of Kansas, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee today. I ask unanimous consent that the report be approved, and that the nomination be confirmed at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I observe the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] on his feet. Doubtless he intends to make a similar request. The Senator from Nebraska was chairman of the subcommittee which considered the nomination. Both Senators from Kansas have very cordially endorsed the nomination. The subcommittee of which the Senator from Nebraska is chairman favorably reported the nomination, and I hope the request of the Senator from Kansas will be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will have to be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] intended to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word.

The nomination of Mr. Huxman to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit has been before the Judiciary Committee for some weeks. Because of one difficulty after another, but not because of any objections to the nomination, the matter was unavoidably put off from week to week. As has already been stated, the subcommittee at its last meeting was unanimously in favor of the nomination. The full committee was unanimously in favor of the nomination, and the nomination was ordered reported to the Senate. Through inadvertence, the one who was delegated to make the report did not file it quite on time.

I join the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Oregon in asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Judge Huxman.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, May 18, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art our God and blessed forevermore, we thank Thee for the fellowship of men and for the hopeful realization of the brotherhood of all classes. We pray that we may know Christ in us as the restraining power and the inspiration of duty. In this hall of legislation, may there be mutual trust and cooperation. Strengthen us with understanding minds and sanctified hearts, and may Thy wisdom be translated into our labors. Bless us with the spirit of optimism instead of regrets; let the stars of promise break up the night and shine in beauty. We pray for our President and all his advisers, for our Speaker and the Congress; do Thou inspire them with the energy of Thy power and purpose; and unto Thee be eternal praise through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 595. An act to increase further the efficiency of the Coast Guard by authorizing the retirement, under certain conditions, of enlisted personnel thereof with 20 or more years of service; and

S. 1876. An act to readjust the commisioned personnel of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. GIBSON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of Commerce.
3. Department of the Interior.
4. Department of Labor.
5. Department of the Navy.
6. Post Office Department.
7. Home Owners' Loan Corporation.
8. The Panama Canal.
9. United States Civil Service Commission.
10. United States Maritime Commission.

NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we will be again asked to appropriate $3,000,000 to carry on the New York World's Fair. Remember we appropriated $3,000,000 for them last year.

I had the privilege of going to the New York World's Fair last week with JACK NICHOLS' congressional party, on which trip we paid our way. It was a wonderful trip, and the New York World's Fair is a wonderful show. [Applause.] If the Members of Congress who went there say the same things I heard them say during the trip, there will be a million and a half more people in this country who will want to see that exposition, and when they do this they will get the $3,000,000 from the people of this country and save the Treasury of the United States that amount.

This is one of the greatest exhibitions I have ever seen. They have all kinds of sports there. Bill Rose's Acquade constitutes one of the finest shows I have ever witnessed, and it is certainly worth the price of admission. The Perisphere and other public buildings are really worth while. So let us tell the people of the country what a great fair is in progress, and by increasing their attendance we will save the Government $3,000,000; we will increase the interest in the fair and all will be better off and the people will all appreciate their visit and will be well paid for their attendance and visit to the fair in New York. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address by Joseph V. Connolly before the National Eucharistic Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CITIZENSHIP DAY

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I desire this morning to call the attention of Members of this House to what will prove to be, in the future history of this country, an important date. It will be the first real exclusive observance of what will be known as Citizenship Day. The event will be held at Manitowoc, Wis., in my own district, on Sunday, May 21, of this year.

This day will climax weeks of preparation, participated in by all the citizenship of Manitowoc County, and the city of Manitowoc, together with valuable suggestions from all parts of the United States. Leading educators, jurists, and public officials will be present to participate in the program. Among these notables will be President Dykstra, of the University of Wisconsin; Chief Justice Rosenbery, of the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin; and John Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education. Dr. R. J. Colbert, head of the University of Wisconsin extension department, is the originator of the idea.

Dr. Colbert lists the five objectives of such a day to be, first, to create a sense of duty and responsibility that accompany the rights of citizenship; second, to give to the entire citizenry a clearer appreciation of its duties, responsibilities, and obligations; third, to develop a clearer understanding of the relations of local government to the State and Nation; fourth, to assist in creating a higher degree of community spirit; and fifth, to counteract unwholesome negative propaganda by generating intelligent and creative participating citizenship.

The day will bring together all of the young men and women who have just reached the age of 21 years. There are about 1,200 of them in Manitowoc County, Wis., while we have in the Nation about 2,500,000 each year who are inducted into the grave responsibilities and the exceptional privilege of citizenship.

As a rule there is nothing done in the course of these events to impress youth with its significance and is taken as a matter of course. This is a dangerous thing in any democracy. An enlightened and intelligent citizenship is the only way to have and maintain a successful democracy.

The young man or woman of today must be impressed with the fact that citizenship carries with it grave duties and responsibilities as well as privileges.

We must impress the youth of today that on them falls the responsibility of improving our standard of living and social position in life. That in the final analysis government is the cooperative effort of citizens to secure the greatest good to the greatest number. We must in some way get the average American voter to take a greater interest in problems of government. His or her duty as a citizen of today is much greater than the citizen of the past. The idea has already been publicized all over the United States, and many editorials in newspapers have been written and published commending and endorsing the idea.

Many cities in Wisconsin have arranged for such a day. The Legislature of the State of Wisconsin is memorializing Congress and suggesting that it be made a national program next year. A bill has been introduced in the Wisconsin Legislature, making such a program mandatory in Wisconsin in 1940, and has already passed the senate.

I commend to my colleagues this Citizenship Day idea, and through you to the citizens in your respective districts. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter written to me by the president of the Philippine National Volunteers on the question of Philippine independence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a short statement by Bainbridge Colby on keeping out of war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement before the Foreign Affairs Committee by Mrs. George H. Fitch.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short statement by Major General Rivers on national defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 74]

Barden	Buckley, N. Y.	Chapman	Douglas
Bell	Burch	Crowther	Evans
Boren	Case, S. Dak.	Curley	Faddis
Bryson	Casey, Mass.	Dirksen	Fernandez
Buck	Celler	Ditter	Flannery

Ford, Leland M.	Johnson, W. Va.	Nichols	Sumner, Ill.
Ford, Thomas F.	Lambertson	Osmers	Sumners, Tex.
Harness	Lord	Pierce, N. Y.	Sutphin
Hartley	McReynolds	Shanley	Weaver
Havenner	Maloney	Short	White, Idaho
Hope	Marshall	Smith, Ill.	Winter
Jensen	Mouton	Starnes, Ala.	Wood

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 380 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE JESSE DASHIELL PRICE

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, the successor to former Representative—now Justice T. Alan Goldsborough—not having been selected, I consider it my duty to announce the death of the former Representative from the First Congressional District, the Honorable Jesse Dashiell Price. Mr. Price was born in White Haven, Somerset, now Wicomico, County, Md., August 15, 1863. He served as a member of the State Senate of Maryland from 1908 to 1916, and was president of that body from 1912 to 1916, when he resigned to enter Congress. He was elected as a Democrat to the Sixty-third Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. Barry Covington because of Mr. Covington's appointment to the District Court of the District of Columbia. Mr. Price was reelected to the Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth Congresses and served from November 3, 1914, to March 3, 1919. Mr. Price was a prominent businessman and active in many ways in the affairs of the State of Maryland. He was a member of the Maryland State Tax Commission for a number of years and later served as chairman of that important body. Former Representative Price died at his home in the Charles Apartments in Baltimore on May 15, 1939, at the age of 75 years.

I speak for the entire Maryland delegation in the House in endorsing the prominent and useful life which former Representative Price so richly enjoyed. He will be missed by the State which honored him many times, and his death is mourned by his many friends.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to place therein an article written by myself appearing in the Chicago Herald-Examiner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to place therein a letter I have just received from the secretary of the Minnesota Fox and Fur Breeders' Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter which recently appeared in the Dakota Farmer relative to the General Welfare Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. MANSFIELD (when the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was called). Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I call up the bill H. R. 6264, authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the bill H. R. 6264. This bill is on the Union Calendar. Under the rule the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6264, with Mr. ZIMMERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Ordinarily bills are read by sections. It has generally been the custom to read river and harbor bills by paragraphs. There are 80 paragraphs in one section, and my inquiry is to know whether the bill will be read by sections or by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. Under later decisions, river and harbor bills are read by sections, instead of paragraphs, and that procedure will be followed in this instance.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the time allowed the respective sides on the bill, I understand it is the practice of the Chair to recognize the chairman of the committee, in this instance the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], for an hour. Do I understand the minority gets an hour on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will be recognized for 1 hour, and the ranking minority Member, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER], will be entitled to 1 hour, to divide and apportion as he sees fit. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to express my sincere thanks to the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for their splendid cooperation in conducting the hearings and in the preparation of the bill before us. I was only permitted to be with the committee for a few days while the hearings were in progress, but at my request the committee very graciously continued in its labors and has brought forth a splendid piece of work, which, if enacted into law, will supply some very important and necessary aids in the transportation system of our country.

The bill embraces 72 projects for the improvement of our rivers and harbors, all of which are fully described in the committee report. The total amount of expenditures involved is estimated by the engineers at $119,928,100, to be paid as the work progresses through a period of years. No public funds will become available for any of these works until the appropriations are made for the fiscal year ending in 1941. Some of the larger projects will require 8 years thereafter for completion. Consequently, the amount of expenditures for any one year will be comparatively small.

The thoroughness with which river and harbor projects are considered is not generally known to the public. In fact, many Members of Congress who have their multitudinous duties to perform have not had time or occasion to give these matters their careful attention. I will refer briefly to the course of procedure.

Congress, of course, originates all projects by ordering a preliminary survey. From the result of this preliminary investigation, the procedure of which I shall not take time to describe, the Board of Engineers determines whether the potentialities are such as justify the cost of further investigation. If the facts appear to warrant such further investigation, then the district engineer proceeds to make all necessary surveys and report the facts to the division engineer, with his recommendation.

If favorably considered by both the district and division engineers, then the matter comes before the Board here in Washington. The Board leaves nothing undone in its investigations, and if the project is found to be worthy in all respects it submits its favorable report to the Chief of Engineers, who likewise gives it thorough consideration from every conceivable angle. If the project also has the approval of the Chief of Engineers, he transmits the report to the Secretary of War, after which it is referred to the National Resources Committee, which acts as a clearing house in coordinating it with works contemplated by other governmental agencies in the same field, if any.

After the investigations are all complete the reports are returned to the Secretary of War to be transmitted to Congress. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors then gives the whole matter another thorough overhauling before reporting the bill to Congress. There is no type or class of legislation in this or in any other country that is given the same degree of thoroughness of investigation as that which is given to river and harbor legislation. Those who facetiously refer to it as "pork barrel" legislation are many years behind the times.

From the dawn of history transportation by water has been in general practice in all countries having access to waterways. It is still in general use, because no cheaper method of transportation has ever been found to take its place. In ancient and in modern times, with few if any exceptions, the most prosperous countries of which we have an account have been those whose commerce has moved by water wherever there was water sufficient for the practical movement of commercial boats.

Greece and Rome in their heyday were in the front rank of maritime nations. Their commerce extended to all the civilized world. England and Japan, both comparatively small island kingdoms, and dependent almost entirely upon water transportation for their national existence, hold high rank in national and world commerce today. It is said that the Union Jack can at all times be seen in every major port in the world. Germany probably leads the world in inland water-borne commerce, notwithstanding her great network of railways. Her rivers are under high state of improvement and connected by strategic canals and cross channels.

One year ago this month Professor Burrows, of Yale, president of the American School of Oriental Research, announced the excavation of King Solomon's port on the Red Sea, a flourishing city of trade and industry nearly 3,000 years ago. It was pronounced to be the port of Ezion-Geber, which, from the Biblical account, was beside Eloth on the shore of the Red Sea in the land of Edom. It is said that it was here that King Solomon, with the aid of Hiram, King of Tyre, built a great fleet of ships in which a rich trade was carried on with southern Arabia and indirectly with India. Many of the relics unearthed by the research party consisted of articles used in shipbuilding operations, showing the importance of water-borne commerce in that early day.

Nations without access to the high seas have great difficulties to contend with and cannot expect to maintain high rank as commercial nations. Austria, with the great city of Vienna, was left almost lifeless by the Versailles Treaty, in which her coastal area was given to Italy, leaving her entirely inland. Largely for this reason she voluntarily surrendered her national existence, which had had a proud history for many years.

After the World War Poland was reestablished as a nation with her northern boundary extended to the Baltic, giving her access to the free port of Danzig. In this comparatively short time Poland has become a very important maritime nation. Her flag on ships of the Gdynia-American Line is now familiar to all our major Atlantic and Gulf ports, and this line has become one of the most important in the movement of American cotton.

Poland on her own territory has established the additional port of Gdynia, about 15 miles from Danzig, where the little fishing village of 126 people has developed into a great commercial city of 120,000 population in less than 20 years. In 1937 the port of Gdynia had a commerce of more than 9,000,000 tons of general cargo, while the commerce of Danzig had increased from 2,000,000 to 6,000,000 tons. The magazine Marine Progress, for April, contains the announcement that Gdynia is now the second port of importance on the Baltic. Much of the commerce of Danzig and Gdynia passes over the Vistula River, which flows north through Poland, emptying into the Baltic at Danzig, and is under a high state of improvement. Poland furnishes one of the finest examples of the effect of waterway improvement, both as to foreign and inland trade.

Inland waterway improvements are now being carried on in Europe to a greater extent than ever before known. A few years ago the Department of Commerce announced the report of Rollin R. Winslow, consul at Trieste, of the measures taken by the Italian Government for the improvement of the River Po, to provide practical barge-line transportation to Milan and the rich valleys of the Lombard region. The report shows that the Po has been under improvement in part since the twelfth century, at the cost of localities, and the improvements now being carried out have heretofore at various times been under consideration. The cost of the present improvement is to be borne by the Italian Government.

I have here Associated Press dispatches of March 27, 1938, of the announcement made by Field Marshal Herman Wilhelm Goering, of the German Government, in which he stated that ships up to 1,200 tons would soon proceed from the North Sea, over the Rhine, Main, and Danube Rivers, to the Black Sea.

In July 1937 I received a full description of this ambitious waterway project from Colonel Marks of the War Department, now division engineer at Cincinnati. Colonel Marks at that time was in Germany and made a personal inspection of the waterway which was then under construction. It embraces extensive improvements on the Danube, the Main, and the upper Rhine, all of which are connected by artificial channels. It is perhaps the most ambitious inland waterway improvement in the world and will give Germany access to the Black Sea, and possibly later, through the Dardanelles to the Mediterranean.

A few weeks ago the press dispatches announced that Russia was taking steps for the further improvement of the Volga, which has been an avenue of commerce for many years. A few years ago the late Speaker Rainey gave an interesting description of this river before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress. Mr. Rainey had just returned from a boat trip over the Volga.

What I have said shows the great interest other countries are taking in the improvement of their rivers and other waterways. They have long since learned the importance of promoting every practical type of transportation, and not permitting any type to obtain a monopoly. In fact, such a monopoly might soon be the death knell of most any European country. Such a monopoly here would undoubtedly prove disastrous to the interests of the people of this country.

Our transportation systems, whether by rail, pipe line, water, or air, are all necessary for the welfare of the people of this country. This was thoroughly demonstrated by the World War. When the Director General took charge of the railroads on January 1, 1918, his report shows that there were 180,000 loaded cars congested on the eastern terminals that could not reach shipboard. They were loaded with munitions and other materials necessary for the Army in the field, and even the transport ships were having great difficulty in securing necessary fuel, many of them at that time using coal.

The Mississippi River was again brought into action after a lapse of many years in the transportation field. A flotilla of barges was secured, the most of them more or less of an obsolete type, and loaded with coal for the transports. The steamboat Sprague conveyed the flotilla to New Orleans where the coal was made available to the ships for overseas service. This barge fleet covered 12 acres of water and carried a cargo of 56,000 tons, the largest cargo ever transported under a single power in this or any other country up to that time. This thoroughly demonstrated what our rivers could do in time of emergency. Let us do as the European countries are doing, preserve them, improve them, and utilize them for all practical, necessary, and useful purposes.

The total cost of all our waterway improvements for navigation from the beginning of our Government to the present time amounts to $2,308,895,000. This includes expenditures on our ocean and Gulf harbors, the Great Lakes, inland and intercoastal waters including Alaska, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, Hawaii, Midway and Wake Islands. Whilst these improvements have supplied the needs of commerce, many of them have also been useful to the Navy and to the United States Air Mail Service.

The Budget has approved the expenditure of $41,000,000 for the maintenance of all these waterways for the coming year. The maintenance for the year 1937, the last year for which we have official reports, amounted to $38,004,296.45. The water-borne commerce for that year was 583,100,000 tons. The cost of maintenance was 6½ cents per ton of all freights handled.

The maintenance of our railways for the same year, 1937, as approved by the I. C. C., including equipment, was $1,322,-302,748. The freights moved by rail originating on class I railroads for that year was 1,015,586,028 tons. This maintenance cost per ton of freights handled by rail was $1.30, as compared with the cost of 6½ cents per ton of freights moved by water. Maintenance of the waterways are paid out of appropriations made by Congress. The maintenance of railways is paid out of freight and passenger charges approved by the I. C. C. In both instances Jones pays the freight.

For many years it seemed to have been the policy of Congress to improve our rivers for purposes of navigation only. In the course of time, flood control on the Mississippi got to be an important subject for consideration, and the flood-control program is now extended to the entire country.

But little attention was paid to hydroelectric development until after the 308 reports made by the Army engineers in response to the provisions in the river and harbor bill of 1927. These reports made on surveys at a cost of more than $10,000,000 showed unmistakably that power of great value could be developed on many of the rivers of the United States. It is now the fixed policy it seems, to develop and utilize this power wherever practical in connection with navigation improvements.

We should, in my judgment, proceed upon the theory that water in our navigable rivers should be made to perform every reasonable and practicable service to mankind before its return to the ocean from whence it came. Our streams should be kept in a sanitary condition for domestic use, thereby promoting health, rather than scattering the germs of pestilence and disease. Fisheries and wildlife should be promoted, and the needs of irrigation carefully considered. The development of power wherever feasible in connection with navigation improvements should not be neglected. The escape of waters into the ocean without performing these useful services to man is an economic waste that cannot reasonably be condoned. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed." [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. In the very splendid speech the House has just heard from the able gentleman from Texas, he quite properly pointed out that our waterways give us the cheapest form of transportation, and he also said, and I quite agree with him, that no one system of transportation should have a monopoly; but the very things that we have been trying to do over the years in developing our waterways and bringing in new projects is now being seriously imperiled by a bill now pending in the House before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which seeks to give relief to the railroads. I think that certainly a majority of the Congress would be very glad to vote for a measure to give proper and legitimate relief to the railroads of the country, but it is proposed in that bill to place the rate-making power for all water transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission. I ask the gentleman whether he does not agree with the statement that if that is done it will mean that the cheap water rates we now have will be brought up to a parity with the rail rates of the country and, therefore, all of these millions that we have expended will prove to have been spent in vain?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I agree with the gentleman quite thoroughly. I will state that a similar measure was before the Committee on Merchant Marine about 2 years ago. I was a member of that committee and opposed the bill. It was never reported and never came to a vote. I hope that the bill which the gentleman speaks of will receive the same fate. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. LEA. I think the gentleman may rest assured that the present Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will not report a bill that provides for any unjust discrimination against water carriers. What we hope to do is to preserve the economic advantages of each of those methods of transportation which are fair and the best interests of the country demand that those economic advantages should be preserved.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. You do not propose to put these inland waterways under the Interstate Commerce Commission, do you?

Mr. LEA. The committee will probably report in favor of having unified control, but it will not report a bill that provides for any unjust discrimination between different carriers.

Mr. MANSFIELD. In that connection, I would like to state that after some studies covering a period of about 22 years, I have never been able to find where any successful waterway has ever injured any railway in the United States. In the Pittsburgh district, where the greatest amount of waterway traffic is handled, there is also the greatest density of rail traffic. In 1900, when the waterways on the upper Ohio, Allegheny, and Monongahela were carrying 9,000,000 tons of coal, stone, ore, and so forth, the railways were carrying 57,000,000 tons. In 25 years the waterway traffic had increased to 40,000,000 tons, and the rail traffic in the same section had increased to 173,000,000 tons. The bulk commodities handled by water built up the city of Pittsburgh with all the great industries around there and made a tremendous amount of traffic for the railways on which they received a much higher rate for transportation than they would have received on the raw material. [Applause.]

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. I would like to ask the gentleman from California what his attitude will be with respect to the motor transportation which is making inroads on the rail transportation lines and also the water transportation lines?

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman yield for that purpose?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I have already yielded to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KRAMER. I would like to get an idea as to what effect this will have on the motor transportation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Well, you will have to ask the experts. You know, experts never agree. It is said that an expert is just a common man a long way from home. [Laughter.]

Mr. KRAMER. Does not the gentleman know that the motor transportation companies are making inroads not only on the rails but on the water transportation by their cheap rates, and the cost which they impose on the counties and States in maintaining highways over which they operate heavy trucks carrying various traffic; so that a man driving a passenger car does not have a chance to pass them; great trucks, hauling truckloads of oil and other freight from one place to another?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am not defending the trucks nor the highways nor the waterways along that line. It will all work itself out.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question in line with what the gentleman was just saying? Is it not a fact that it was shown in the hearings that no water transportation had ever put a railroad man out of work?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not think there is any doubt about that being true. The rail lines are abandoning an average of a thousand miles of line a year and not a single mile has been on account of water-borne traffic, nor in any section where water traffic has been handled to any great extent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to ask the gentleman this question, in all fairness, and I know I will get a fair answer. I want to be fair in propounding the question. In connection with water, rail, and highway transportation does the gentleman feel that the trucks should be taken off the highways when they give adequate, quick, economical service to buyers and shippers, even though they do somewhat interfere with passenger touring on the highways?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is no use talking about stopping highway construction in this country. That is on foot and it is going to stay there. The sentiment for it, in my judgment, is growing each year, and although the trucks may become to a certain extent nuisances on the public highway, like a great many other nuisances, how are we going to dispose of them?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman agree with me on this observation, that the important thing to keep in mind all the time is to have transportation service that will accommodate shipping demands and at prices they can afford to pay, and that that also includes rails, highways, air, and water?

Mr. MANSFIELD. In other words, look first to the interest of the people of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The interest of the people who want to ship goods.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I believe no one is more interested in or better informed on waterways than the chairman of the committee. I am sure all the Members do not know that in the past few months the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] has suffered considerable physical and mental anguish because he could not be here to call up this bill. He is here today, I believe, under a great strain, and we congratulate him on his recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I join the able, but modest ranking member on the Republican side, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER], in extending to our distinguished chairman the heartiest congratulations of the minority upon his return to health. We congratulate him upon the fact that he is able to appear here today to make this very scholarly address on the subject of water transportation. This Congress in the course of its history has produced many able men who have contributed materially to the growth and development of America, but no man in the Congress has given more generously, more fully, or more effectively of his great natural ability and his devotion to the cause of America than has the distinguished chairman of this committee. [Applause.]

I wish we might have more men of his sterling ability here on this floor—men who like him can sweep aside propaganda, falsehood, mistaken theory, and bear upon such questions as water transportation the full focus of truth and great knowledge.

It is of course elementary, and no amount of propaganda from whatever source can refute it, that low-cost transportation is essential to the growth and development of America. The farmer of the West, the consumer in the city, the manufacturer, the employee in industry, all these men everywhere are looking to this Congress to settle this question, not in accordance with propaganda, not in accordance with half truths, not in accordance with paid advertising or the demand of pressure groups, but in the interest, I say to the gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, in the interest of the American people. When measures are proposed in Congress that have for their bald, positive purpose the throttling of this great source of transportation so essential to the very life of America, this Congress should stop, look, and listen. I had not intended to discuss this phase of the question today. It was interjected into the discussion by the very timely question of the able gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] and my chairman's response thereto.

I want to impress particularly upon the Members on my own side of the aisle that every river and harbor project presented to this Congress for the past 10 years has had the imprimatur, the approval, of the Board of Engineers. I sometimes wonder whether the Congress appreciates the services of these great servants. They are the true career men in our scheme of government. They are not influenced by propaganda. They are not influenced by Wall Street or politics. In the first instance, they came from the top of the class at West Point, and from that time on they have devoted their best efforts and their great ability to the solving of America's transportation problems. Let the waves of propaganda, lying propaganda, bought and paid for propaganda, rise however high they may, these men stand before the people of America as the true keepers, the true protectors of the public domain, these devoted men who are bringing low-cost transportation to the American people through the medium of river and harbor improvements. If unhampered, the engineers will rescue whole areas of America from the oppressive, destructive transportation rates imposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield briefly.

Mr. RANKIN. Is it not true that every single project in this bill has been approved by the Board of Army Engineers?

Mr. CULKIN. No river and harbor project has ever been reported to this House during the 10 years I have served on this committee under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Texas that did not have the full approval of the Army engineers. There have been projects put in these bills in the Senate, but the projects that we have reported have always had the approval of the Board of Army Engineers.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that we never even hold hearings on a project until it has the approval of the Board of Army Engineers?

Mr. CULKIN. The engineers are always called in, as the gentleman states, after they have approved the particular project.

Let me suggest to some of these doubting Thomases, some of these gentleman on my own side of the aisle, that they should read at least one report on a river and harbor project as prepared by the Army engineers. If they do they will marvel at the full information as to present and future possibilities that these reports contain. The Corps of Engineers has served the country for 100 years. They laid out the transcontinental railroads, and in the early days built all the bridges. They constitute the organization from which Robert E. Lee came. Their traditions are unassailable in point of integrity. The Congress has therefore a definite yardstick, if you please, for every project that is presented in this bill. May I say in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that there are but 3 projects in this bill out of the 73 that it carries on which anyone differs.

Permit me to call the attention of the House for a brief moment to the accomplishments of lake transportation in the Great Lakes area. The Great Lakes transportation is not subsidized transportation. Its seamen are the best paid of any in the world.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Briefly.

Mr. RANKIN. There have been a great many stereotyped telegrams and messages sent in here about railroad labor. May I ask the gentleman if it was not brought out before the committee that no railroad laborers were ever put out of business because of the development of river transportation?

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman is right. Of course, the suggestion that railroad labor is affected by water transportation is utterly absurd. One of the main beneficiaries—I assert this and I can demonstrate it without doubt—of water transportation in America has been the railroads. Take Chicago, San Francisco, all the gulf and ocean ports, take all the great cities that have had water and rail transportation. In those cities we had had our greatest and soundest growth. In those areas the railroads have flourished.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Briefly.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman consider 18 telegrams from labor railroad organizations, individually signed, 3 being members of the Big Four, as stereotyped letters?

Mr. CULKIN. I consider that is part of the pressure propaganda that this House will hear from more and more as the question is being considered.

Mr. MILLER. From organized labor.

Mr. CULKIN. The railroads and the brotherhoods went to war. The railroads tried to cut the men 15 percent, but the American people opposed that cut. American public sentiment beat that cut. Now, the railroads and the brotherhoods have ganged up together to create a monopoly on transportation in America. That is the question that the Members of this House will have to face shortly.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I cannot yield now.

I want to give the comparative freight rates, if you please, by rail and water. From Havre, Mont., to Duluth, via the Great Northern is 932 miles. It costs $8.82 to carry a ton of wheat between those two points. From Duluth, Minn., to Buffalo, N. Y., by lake steamer, 988 miles, 56 miles farther, it costs 67 cents. In other words, to carry this wheat a less distance by rail costs 14 times as much.

An attempt is now being made in this Congress to harness the type of transport that is giving relief to the American farmers.

Let me give you another figure comparing the American railroads with the Canadian roads. This is a comparison between the Canadian Pacific and Great Northern. From Turner, Mont., to Duluth, via the Great Northern, 884 miles, it costs $8.72 to carry a ton of wheat. From Saskatoon to Port Arthur on the Canadian Pacific, a greater distance, it costs $4.40. In other words, it costs half as much in Canada to haul over a greater distance by practically a parallel line, with only an imaginary line between the two countries. The farmer pays twice as much to carry it on the American railroad.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I am sorry I cannot.

I wish I had more time to develop that thought. I was shocked some years ago when I learned that up in the Snake River country in Idaho it cost more to carry a hundred pounds of wheat a hundred miles than it was worth.

I believed then and I believe now that such a situation as that cries to Heaven for relief.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, during the depression, from Salina, Kans., to Chicago, it cost 25 cents a bushel, or twice as much as it sold for, to carry a bushel of wheat between those two points. In other words, it cost as much as 2 bushels were marketed for to carry 1 bushel to Chicago. At the same time lake transportation was carrying corn down to Buffalo, 998 miles—a greater distance—for 1½ cents a bushel. It cost about half as much to carry a bushel of wheat from Chicago to Buffalo as it did to send a 1-ounce letter from Chicago to Buffalo. That is the type of transportation which some of our earnest and propagandized gentlemen are endeavoring to put into a strait jacket.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I will have to yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. A moment ago the gentleman compared rates on the Great Northern with rates on the Canadian Pacific. Is he aware of the fact that the Great Northern today is not a bankrupt corporation, but the Canadian National Railroad is?

Mr. CULKIN. As a matter of fact, that is part of the mistaken half truths that go out on this question. The Canadian Pacific carries this grain for half as much. May I say to the gentlemen here present, that is one of the main reasons why the western farmers have lost their market abroad for wheat. I wish my western colleagues would look into that. The Canadians take care of the farmers, both with water and rail transportation. The Interstate Commerce Commission continues to pile up rates. The Canadian Pacific is not a Government-subsidized railroad. The Canadian Pacific is a privately owned railroad. That is another mistaken idea.

Mr. OLIVER and Mr. THORKELSON rose.

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps the gentleman would be interested to know that the Canadian railroad referred to which is in bankruptcy and is insolvent and operating at a deficit is the Canadian National Railroad, not the Canadian Pacific, which is operating at a profit.

Mr. CULKIN. That is true; and the Canadian Pacific is carrying wheat for the Canadian farmers at half what it is costing ours. I would say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, whom I admire, that our railroads are serving 130,000,000 people, while the Canadian railroads are serving but a meager 10,000,000 people. Our volume of business is much greater and our rates therefore should be much lower. All this has been done under the magic procedure of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to whom it is now proposed to turn over on a silver platter the water transportation of America. I wish I had time to develop that thought further. I shall do so at a later date.

May I say that 90 percent of the harbors that have been improved in America have been improved at the request of the railroads. For example, in normal years over the improved harbor of New York, at least $13,000,000,000 worth of freight is moved by the railroads.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that four or five important harbors in the State of Michigan are almost exclusively for railroad-ferry use?

Mr. CULKIN. Exactly. We would not have grown to be the country we are and the railroads would not have had the business they have enjoyed except for the intervention of water transportation. Water transportation bridged the gap, as the chairman stated a moment ago. It brought the ore from the Mesabi Range to the coal in the Pittsburgh area, and then came that development. I recall one year it made possible to the railroads in that Pittsburgh section, which were created and fostered and made possible by lake-water transportation, an income of $165,000,000. No; that cry about the waterways injuring the railroads simply is stupid, foolish, and old-fashioned propaganda. The cure for the railroads' condition—and I am as deeply in sympathy with them as the gentleman from Pennsylvania—does not lie in throttling water transportation, because then you throttle all of industrial, all of consuming, and all of agricultural America. The railroads and their employees would be the first to suffer. The solution is, I suggest, for the railroads to put their own house in order. I am willing to liberalize the procedure by which they may buy equipment through loans from the R. F. C.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on the point he just made?

Mr. CULKIN. I have only 5 minutes, so be brief.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will ask a short question.

The gentleman observed that the railroads should put their own house in order. Will the gentleman enlarge on that point for just a moment?

Mr. CULKIN. The stock-market value of the railroads today is approximately $9,170,000,000. The I. C. C. has appraised the railroads at $26,000,000,000; and they are engaged, insofar as we can make out, in an attempt to make the American people pay on a $26,000,000,000 valuation, $17,000,000,000 of which does not exist. In other words, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, the majority of the I. C. C.—and I do not question the personal integrity of the Commissioners—have become railroad-minded. At the turn of the century the railroads, through their skillful attorneys—and they have very able attorneys—took over the I. C. C. body and soul.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say, then, that the solution of the so-called railroad problem does not lie in the recovery of tonnage from the waterways or other transportation agencies?

Mr. CULKIN. I would say to the gentleman that I believe they must reorganize their financial structure. I will say further that if we would get an era of fair prosperity, according to Mr. Eastman, and many other economists who have studied the question agree, the railroads would come into their own. May I suggest again, to the Members of the House, that pending the coming in of this legislation they steel themselves against this sob-stuff propaganda that has no foundation in fact.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission has erected barriers and that the situation might have been met successfully by railroad management had it not been for the interference of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. CULKIN. I would not want to answer that question categorically, but I do believe—and in this connection I am in accord with the senior Senator from Montana—that the railroads have had too much banker management. I will say to the gentleman that the people who control the class I railroads of the United States, and that is seven-eighths of the railroad property, are, in fact, J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. That is where the real railroad management is today.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman believes the railroads have perhaps been operated too much for the bond and stock holders instead of giving service and maintaining the capital structure?

Mr. CULKIN. The bondholders and stockholders never got anything in the way of principal. It was the bankers that got the cream of it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The financial managers?

Mr. CULKIN. The railroads have to divest themselves of that control first. That is another point on which I agree with the senior Senator from Montana.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, if the railroads will squeeze anywhere from $10,000,000,000 to $17,000,000,000 out of their capital structure they can meet competition of any kind.

Mr. CULKIN. This Congress should not immortalize the past sins of the railroads.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. No; I am sorry.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I would like to answer.

Mr. CULKIN. This legislation comes to you tested as if by fire. It has run the gantlet of those brilliant economists, the Army engineers, who to my knowledge have never made a mistake in their economic findings. It comes approved by that group, and the bill should be passed, after the Committee has disposed of the few controversial features contained in it. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to share with my colleagues on the committee what has already been said regarding the very distinguished chairman of this committee. No one on the committee holds him in higher affection or regard than he who now speaks from the Well of this House, and that committee is most fortunate to have a man who is as well versed on the rivers and harbors of this country as our distinguished chairman, Judge MANSFIELD, of Texas. [Applause.]

During nearly 7 years of service on that committee I have stood in the Well of this House and consistently supported river and harbor legislation. I propose to do that again today, and will support wholeheartedly every project in this bill except three, which, in my judgment, are not justified under present conditions.

This bill, while on its face carrying authorizations for $119,000,000, is a very unique and unusual bill in this regard: It conceals $210,000,000 worth of projects that you know nothing about unless you read the reports on those projects carefully; and of the three projects which I have in mind, and which I cannot support, two of them contain power. They are purely power projects; and even though this may be denied from the floor of this House, nevertheless, the Army engineer who appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee frankly admitted that the Umatilla Dam, out in the States of Oregon and Washington, is 80 percent power and 20 percent navigation and irrigation. While that $119,000,000 may be very clear to every Member of the House, it is not shown that if you adopt that project—and this is the initial authorization for which they are asking $23,700,000—you are adopting that project as a Federal project, and the report shows that the project will cost, when completed, $177,000,000.

This is one of the projects to which I object, and I object to it for the reason that the Army engineers frankly say that this project on the Snake River or on the Columbia below the junction of the Snake, is not necessary even though that money is only going to be used to build the foundation for the power dams. They say it is not necessary as long as the great blocks of power produced by Bonneville and Grand Coulee have not been sold, and that is the situation that exists today. The engineers stated that if this dam had been installed before Grand Coulee or Bonneville then there would be some justification for it at the present time.

The other project which will undoubtedly be offered from the floor of the House as a committee project, involves the setting up of a little T. V. A. proposition on the Connecticut River above Hartford.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to my distinguished chairman.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The cost of that is in addition to the amount of $119,000,000 mentioned in my figures, because my figures were prepared before it was agreed to put that in the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes; I understand very clearly that that is so.

The bill, if it goes through with the three projects which I shall object to, and offer amendments to strike two of them out, will not be $119,000,000, but will be $341,000,000, and if anybody has the temerity to offer from the floor another project which has had the attention of the country for several years, this bill may reach more than one-half billion dollars of authorizations.

Oh, but you say this is not an appropriation of money, and I grant that, but it is the first step toward the Treasury. It is putting the hand on the doorknob; it is taking a look into a Treasury that is already empty; and I object to these projects on the ground that this is no time, under economic conditions existing in this land, to force upon the country projects that are not needed. Lay them on the shelf until such time as they are needed and when the country is in better condition, then we may be doing a service to the Nation.

I wish to say a little bit more about the project in the Connecticut River Valley. It is above Hartford, and it involves $13,000,000. It will be admitted on the floor, and was admitted to the committee, that $1,500,000 of that money will be used to buy out private utilities. Up to this very moment not a friendly official voice from the State of Connecticut has been raised in favor of the project, while a vast majority of the Representatives in this body are opposed to it, as well as the Governor of that State. People, humble people, even a farm woman, came down here with a petition signed by more than 600 people, a woman with gnarled hands, with a face bronzed from weather and wind from time spent on the farm, to protest against spending public money on a project they did not want in that valley. What is the purpose of it? It is nothing more or less than to put the Government of the Untied States a little deeper in the power business; and I wish to direct my remarks for a few minutes now to just what that policy has done in the United States during the last few years.

In the morning paper the President of the United States is quoted as challenging the monopoly committee to discover some way to harness America's billions of idle dollars and put them to making jobs. Private capital is abundant, says the President, but it is not at work. I suggest that the President do not look beyond himself to find one of the reasons why the dollars are not at work. People who have saved up money against a rainy day are keeping it at home, hidden in the mattresses; they are hoarding, because they are afraid to risk their savings while the administration maintains an attitude unfavorable and unfriendly, if not almost hostile, toward private enterprise, which sometimes appears to be a mania. Take, for example, the New Deal whipping boy, the Power Trust, which seems to be the target for all the remarks that are unfavorable to business. In a side-door approach to socialism the administration has taxed for the destruction of their own investment the 4,000,000 investors who directly own most of the utility industry, and 65,000,000 insurance policyholders, who own indirectly one-fourth of that industry. In the past 6 years we have spent or pledged ourselves to spend nearly $2,000,000,000 to duplicate and compete with and destroy one of the heaviest taxpayers of the country. In the face of such a situation, who would be fool enough to invest new money in such an industry?

The President said that it is our task to find and energetically adopt those specific measures which will bring together idle men, machines, and money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. May I have an additional 10 minutes?

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes more to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer as the very first specific measure toward that laudable end, immediate action by the Congress which will reassure investors to the point where, once again, the utility industry will go back on a billion-a-year building basis. There is a chance for idle men, idle machines, and idle money.

Let us look at the building record of this industry. In the 10 years from 1923 to 1933, the electric industry constructed in new lines and plants an average of $711,000,000 annually. In 6 years, from 1933 to 1939, the building average was $282,000,000 annually. On the basis of the previous 10 years, this was an annual building deficit of $429,000,000 for every year since that policy began. Moreover, in the last 4 of these 6 years there had been a consumption of electricity far higher than in the boom days of the preceding 10 years. What has caused this situation? Listen to me, and I shall give you the answer, for it is plain. During the preceding decade, before the present administration came into power, the general public invested new money in the electric industry to the extent of an annual average of $638,000,000. Since this administration began this policy of putting the Government in competition with its private citizens, which I am objecting to, that has dropped to $49,000,000 a year. That means an annual new capital deficit of nearly half a billion dollars. If the building average of the preceding 10 years had continued normally over the past 6 years, the utility industry would have built $3,000,000,000 more of new lines and plants. In fact, because of the record-breaking loans of the past 4 years, it probably would have exceeded that figure by a billion dollars more. I shall put into the RECORD a table of figures from the Federal Power Commission and from the Electrical World, statistical edition, showing the decline in the amount of capital invested in this industry and the decline in new construction in spite of a marked increase in the consumption of electric energy caused by the policy adopted by this Congress of putting the Government into competition with its citizens.

[1] Electrical World, annual statistical edition.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I ask the gentleman to defer that for a moment. Let me call your attention to these figures: From 1923 to 1932 this country consumed on an average 60,758,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy. It put into new construction an average of $711,353,100 annually, and new capital to the extent of $638,000,000 annually. Since 1933, although the consumption of electric energy has increased to 82,996,000,000 kilowatt-hours, nevertheless new construction has declined from $711,000,000 to $282,000,000 annually, and the new capital that has gone into this business has dropped to $49,000,000 a year instead of being up to $638,000,000 a year, where it was before we began this policy.

The time has come when we must make up our minds whether we want prosperity in this country or whether we want back-door socialism. No time to call a halt is better than the present. Let us begin by striking out this unnecessary Umatilla Dam in Oregon and the unwanted attempt to set up a little T. V. A. in the Connecticut River Valley.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he did not think that the fact that private utilities have dropped $3,000,000,000 in development in the last 10 years over the preceding 10 years was partly due, at least, to the manipulation and operation of such concerns as Insull, where the public lost nearly $3,000,000,000 in the same 10-year period?

Mr. DONDERO. Just because one company may have overstepped and done wrong is no reason why the entire industry of the Nation should be penalized by the policy we now pursue.

Mr. LEAVY. But where you have a loss of nearly $3,000,000,000 of public investment in a 10-year period, does not the gentleman believe that would cause the investing public to become skeptical of trusting their savings to such companies?

Mr. DONDERO. Not quite as much as when their own Government comes into competition with them by setting up a false and deceptive yardstick and makes the public believe that private industry is overcharging for electric energy. Private business cannot compete on the same basis with Government money and property, on which it pays no taxes, pays no interest, and on which it has no administrative costs.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. During these years we have been squeezing this water out of these alleged investments, is it not a fact that we have reduced light and power rates to the electric consumers throughout the country $625,000,000 a year?

Mr. DONDERO. No; I take issue with that statement and I will answer the gentleman by saying that the reduction in the rate for electric energy depends upon many things, and one of the things is the greater demand for that particular commodity. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. And honest competition which we are giving them.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRISWOLD].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, we are considering a Rivers and Harbors Committee bill as an aid to the transportation system of our country. Not all our people, sections, or States can have water transportation; some must depend on railroads and some on highways. Even our rivers and harbors are largely dependent on our railroads and highways to get freight to or from them. Whatever means of transportation we may consider must be considered in relation to and in conjunction with all other forms.

From the beginning of history the size and power of every nation depended on its ability to secure and control transportation. The location and size of cities, both in the Old World and in the United States, is determined almost entirely by transportation. Whoever controls transportation can determine the location and size of our cities and shift our population at will.

Water is the oldest form of transportation we have, and in the early history of this country it determined where our cities should be built. The Yankee sailor and the Yankee clipper were supreme, and our ships carried a large part of our world's commerce. Then steam power came into use, and the railroads came into being. We neglected our merchant marine and expanded our railroads. The railroads meant the opening up of great areas of transportation-locked resources. The Government encouraged and our people invested in the expansion of our railway system. We covered every State, and the Nation is a great network of railroads. We built and still have the greatest railway system in the world. As our railway system grew, it controlled all transportation; and with the monopoly in transportation came abuses of power. Money was squandered and spent in corrupting the very Government and people that built the system. Public opinion turned against the abuse of power, and about 1900 we entered into a period of taxation and regulation that has brought every railroad we have to its knees, if not to actual bankruptcy. With the coming of the railroad era, we neglected our merchant ships, and the American flag almost disappeared from the ocean. The raft, barge, and steamboat that plied our inland rivers disappeared. We depended entirely on the railroads. Whatever we may have done in the past, intentionally or otherwise, our transportation developed every section of the country on a fairly even basis. Cities and manufacturers flourished in every section of our country, and we came nearer to offering an equal opportunity to every industry than any country of like size in the world.

When our railroads fell into disfavor, we gradually turned again to water as a means of transportation and built the Panama Canal. We tried to build a merchant marine and failed. Now we are again making a try to put American ships on the ocean. About 10 years ago Congress began to pay some attention to rivers and harbors and during the last few years we have spent more on rivers and harbors than was spent in our entire previous history. We are providing a channel in our rivers and building canals. We are widening and deepening our harbors. We not only are developing our natural waterways but are building unnatural ones. We are offering a right-of-way, free of charge, for our shipping and relieving our ships of all taxes. When all such incentives fail and an ill-conceived project carries no freight we subsidize the transportation to the extent of building and operating barge and freight lines by the Government itself. With such a subsidy we are building up water transportation on a below actual cost basis. We are granting a special privilege to the few who have water transportation at the expense of the many who do not. We are giving an unfair advantage to the manufacturer who is fortunate enough to be on a system of subsidized water transportation and placing his inland competitor in a position where he must compete against the Government itself.

The Board of Army Engineers is authorized to pass on each project in this bill, but they are allowed to justify a project on the amount of freight that can be taken away from the railroads. Freight taken from a railroad, unless the railroad is to be abandoned, only means a higher cost on the freight the road does handle or a general increase in freight rates in other parts of the line. The railroads that have water competition may be forced to reduce rates in order to salvage a part of the freight and continue their existence but in that case it only adds to the burden of freight that must be borne by the inland shipper. The Board of Army Engineers is allowed to justify a project even if over half the cost is a power project and no market in sight for the power. We have thrown prudence and judgment to the winds and this bill contains projects that sober judgment would never consider.

We build a highway because the freight and passenger traffic demand it. We extend a railroad because there is freight needing an outlet that justifies the extension. We build many of our waterways not because of any demand by the shippers or general public, but because some Senator or Congressman envisions a great expenditure of public money in his district and proceeds to build an organization to support it. If it is not used, he asks the Government for a sufficient subsidy so that it will be used.

The policy we are now pursuing means constantly increasing freight rates in the inland portions of the United States. It means unjustified low water rates, subsidized by the very portions of the United States paying the highest freight rates. It increases the advantage of the industry on the water over his inland competitor. It means that the manufacturer in your district or mine who has national competition and no water transportation cannot compete with his rival who has water transportation subsidized by the Government itself. His factory must stagnate and rot while his water competitor takes his trade.

Heavy industries have already sought the water and the others must follow. Population follows the manufacturer. If our present policy is continued, those States and districts without adequate and subsidized water transportation must yield their industries and population to swell our already overcrowded coastal area. The Congress can either continue and extend the present policy, and by so doing give notice to every inland manufacturer that his business must be liquidated and inland cities cease to grow or the Congress can refuse to authorize and subsidize water transportation to the detriment of the great central portion of the United States and allow the manufacturer and cities there to live.

I would like to support a river and harbor bill. I believe that there is a place for water transportation, particularly in heavy commodities, but I cannot support this bill because it contains projects costing millions of dollars that in my opinion are not economically justified. It goes beyond reason and tends to destroy the industry of the great central part of the United States, of which my district is a part. Excesses lead to reaction. I appeal to the real believers of water transportation in this House, not to allow this bill or any other to be packed with extravagant unjustified projects. It will be resented by the American people and means the future defeat of real worth-while projects. The present bill, I believe, is detrimental to the welfare and best interest of the people of these United States and I cannot support it. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'NEAL). The gentleman yields back 1 minute.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I think we should particularly remember at the outset that this is not an appropriation bill. It does not authorize a single dollar of expenditure. It is merely an authorization bill from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which authorizes certain projects. Of course, it means that under it no money will be expended during this coming fiscal year. As our worthy chairman stated, it carries $119,000,000 of approved projects. In addition to that there is an amendment which will be offered, but the bill itself covers $119,928,100 and 72 projects.

It is my good fortune to serve on this committee. Being a new Member, I have enjoyed very, very much having a service of this type on this distinguished committee, because this committee does have for its purpose the handling of projects which are not in their nature political. Regardless of whether we sit on the right or left side of the aisle, the projects which come before us on the Rivers and Harbors Committee may be considered as nonpartisan projects which are approved by that outstanding Board of Army Engineers, who, down through the ages of their service, have stood as guardians at the gate and have not permitted anything for political purposes to pass them and come before us under a river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] intimated, if he did not say so, that this Umatilla Dam was wholly unnecessary. Of course, the Army engineers all disagree with him. But is it not a fact that this dam is absolutely necessary to render that river navigable up to the Grand Coulee Dam?

Mr. ANGELL. It is.

Mr. RANKIN. And if it is not built or some provision is not made, that river will not be navigable except for a short distance above Bonneville Dam?

Mr. ANGELL. The gentleman is absolutely correct. In the short time I have at my disposal I will attempt to comment on that a little later.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, it fills in the gap of transportation in the great Columbia River?

Mr. ANGELL. That is true.

For some 15 or 20 years it was my privilege to act in the engineering service of the Federal Government. During that period I had occasion to go over all of the Western States—Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana—and view, first-hand, many of these great projects in the West, and to know something from the standpoint of one on the ground and in the field, of these projects and what they mean to the people of our community.

Many of these projects, of course, are in the East. Some of them are in the South; some are in the Middle West; others are on the Great Lakes and others on the Atlantic seashore, but a number of them also are on the Pacific coast. One of them is the so-called Umatilla project of which my good friend from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] spoke a few moments ago, saying he was opposed to the project. He was opposed to it, however, because in his judgment it is a power project. It is not in my district in Oregon. It is on the Columbia River a short distance below the mouth of the Snake, between Washington and Oregon, but my State is vitally interested in it. My colleague from Washington [Mr. HILL] has the privilege of serving the district opposite, in the State of Washington.

The situation with reference to Umatilla Dam is this: The Columbia River is the second largest river in the United States. It drains an area of over 250,000 square miles, one-tenth of the area of the United States, an area larger than the Republic of France. This river serves four States—Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana. The area comprises almost a nation in itself. These four States are progressive; they are new. In some areas, of course, they are sparsely settled, but in other areas they are thickly settled, and they are rich in mineral resources. They have a great expanse of fine agricultural land, and they have immense water resources, including hydroelectric power and water for navigation. Over and beyond that, this area is an integral part of this great country of ours, the United States of America.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is a fact, is it not, that the Columbia is the second largest river in the United States?

Mr. ANGELL. It is the second largest river in the United States.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And the Snake River, one of its tributaries, is 1,000 miles long.

Mr. ANGELL. The Snake River is 1,000 miles long. The Columbia River is about 1,200 miles in length; so this river and its tributaries drain a tremendous area. Thomas Jefferson commissioned Lewis and Clark to go on that memorable journey of exploration over a century ago. They traversed the Columbia River down to its very mouth, Astoria, Oreg., and brought to the attention of the world, and particularly of our own country, the great resources of the Northwest.

This river, as our distinguished chairman has said, together with the Snake, is one of the greatest waterways in the United States. This Umatilla Dam project is not a power project; it is purely and simply a navigation project. With all due deference to our distinguished colleague on the committee from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], I say it is a navigation project, because I personally saw to it that the authorization in the bill itself provided that it should be limited to navigation and to irrigation; but, as a matter of fact, there is no irrigation in it, because the authorization is for the construction of the dam only. When the dam is built, of course, a lake will be created behind it and the water will be there available for irrigation if it should be needed.

Mr. Chairman, the Umatilla Dam is a navigation project on the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington. The project, however, affects the entire Northwest Territory contiguous to this great waterway. Under section 6 of the River and Harbor Act, approved August 30, 1935, surveys were authorized in accordance with the River and Harbor Act of January 21, 1927. On May 21, 1938, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved by the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, That the Chief of Engineers is hereby requested, in reviewing reports on the Columbia and Snake Rivers, Wash., Oreg., and Idaho, in accordance with resolutions previously adopted by this committee, to consider the indirect benefits that would accrue to the general public from improvement of the waterways in question, including relief of unemployment.

In response to these authorizations the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors made extensive surveys of the Columbia and Snake Rivers and its report is embodied in House Document 704, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session. The complete improvement of these rivers for navigation is an extensive program and the Board of Engineers, as well as Major General Schley, Chief of Engineers, reported that transportation savings and benefits from irrigation were not sufficient at the present time to justify the construction of the entire project. But, as stated by Major General Schley in his letter of transmission—

I consider these reports to be most valuable documents in the forward planning of the water resources of the Nation, and I have no doubt that this very promising section of the country will eventually justify the prosecution of the project. Furthermore, the indirect and intangible benefits, coupled with the tangible benefits, may be found sufficient to warrant construction of elements of the project for relief of unemployment. For these reasons some action by Congress at this time would be advantageous which recognizes the virtue of this project and gives it such stamp of approval as would make it a basis for modifying the existing projects and as would provide an over-all plan for coordinating the improvements in this part of the valley of the Columbia River which may be undertaken by local agencies or by States or be selected for relief employment. The approval of the plan by Congress would also afford reasonable assurance that the Federal Government would participate in carrying the project to completion when conditions warrant.

I therefore recommend that the general plans presented herein for the initial and ultimate development of the Columbia and Snake Rivers between the pool of the Bonneville Dam and Lewiston, Idaho, be accepted by the Congress as a general guide for future development of the waterway in the combined interests of navigation, irrigation, and the development of hydroelectric power, and that the Congress authorize from time to time such portions of the plan as it wishes to initiate, revised as may be needed at the time to meet changing conditions.

This project, as approved by the Rivers and Harbors Committee to be included in the river and harbor omnibus bill, is limited to the construction of the Umatilla Dam only for the purpose of navigation and without generating facilities, as specified in paragraph 83, page 37, of Document 704, to which I have referred. It does not, therefore, cover any additional facilities for hydroelectric power. At the beginning of this session of Congress, on January 3, 1939, our esteemed and efficient colleague, chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], gave an outline of the important subjects which would come up for consideration during this session having to do with the development of our water resources. His address appears on page 5 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 3. He stated that—

It is important that we pass a river and harbor bill during this session of Congress in order that the transportation facilities of our waterways may keep pace with the growth of the country and the needs of water-borne traffic.

He further stated:

The national aspects of the proposed improvements are indicated by the fact that the projects under consideration involve construction in 30 or more States and affect directly or indirectly every State in the Union.

He then proceeded to outline these projects. Referring to the project under consideration, he said:

In the Pacific Northwest reports are ready for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors * * * for the improvement of the Columbia and Snake Rivers in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. The proposed dams on the Columbia and Snake Rivers include extensive developments of hydroelectric power and comprise a comprehensive plan that may be authorized in part or in whole.

The construction of the Umatilla Dam is one step only in this development and is in line with the recommendation of the Board of Engineers and the Chief of Engineers.

The gentleman from Texas, Judge MANSFIELD, in his remarks to which I have referred made a significant statement which is worthy of consideration:

The development of our rivers and harbors for water-borne traffic is essential not only to the peacetime prosperity of the country but also to preparation of national defense. The waterways of the country carry large tonnages more economically than the railroads and serve the demand for heavy and large traffic which is beyond the capacity of the railroads. The two types of transportation should not be regarded as competitive since from a broad national viewpoint they supplement each other in the development of river basins. Such general development is dependent on low transportation rates for bulky and low-cost commodities, which general development creates in turn greater tonnage of high-grade goods which can stand higher transportation rates by rail. The boats and tows moving in the Ohio River give the appearance by their number of large traffic. When the tonnages are computed the enormous amount of freight is more evident. On the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers an observer does not see so many tows, but when he realizes that 1 tow carries as much tonnage as 200 loaded freight cars, or 3 freight trains, he realizes the great volume of the traffic.

One who works on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives is constantly impressed with the thoroughness, completeness, and comprehensive character of the plans which we have ready for the improvement and development of the Nation's navigable rivers and their tributaries. Not only do the Army engineers have all the information, data, and plans with respect to our great network of waterways, but the other agencies of the Government, each in its sphere of activity, also have their plans ready and up to date. The separate agencies are in constant contact and cooperation, exchanging information and plans, in such way that their effective operations meet and join so as to omit nothing, and so as to be effective as a unified whole with the minimum expense and the maximum efficiency and economy.

My colleagues, many of you who have not had occasion to visit the Pacific Northwest, which I hope you will do soon, may not appreciate the importance of the Columbia River and the part its development plays in the progress and welfare of our great Pacific Northwest. The Columbia River is one of our great waterways, being the second largest river in the United States. It rises in British Columbia not far from the international boundary and flows northwest 195 miles then turns south 380 miles, continuing west 110 miles, and then south 205 miles to its confluence with the Snake River at Pasco, Wash. It then flows westward 325 miles along the boundary between Washington and Oregon to the Pacific Ocean. The Snake River, one of its largest tributaries, rises in western Wyoming and flows westward across Idaho and northward along the boundary between the States of Oregon and Washington to Lewiston, Idaho, and thence westward 139 miles to its mouth.

The Columbia River has other important tributaries. The Columbia River watershed has an area of 259,000 square miles. This large drainage basin, embracing many mountain ranges, high plateaus, and numerous lakes, affords a continuous water supply throughout the year. Government reports show that the discharge of the Columbia at The Dalles has ranged from 35,000 to an estimated maximum of 1,170,000 cubic feet per second during the 60 years the records have been kept. The discharge of the Snake at Riparia, 67 miles above Pasco, has ranged from 10,600 to 409,000 cubic feet per second. This waterway is the only one affording water transportation to the inland empire of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and parts of Montana. In this territory there are large agricultural areas, stock raising, mining, and mineral deposits, as well as forest products, requiring cheap transportation in order to furnish markets. From pioneer days the Columbia River has been an important means of transportation for this whole area. Before the construction of highways, and later railroads, it afforded water transportation from the sea for many hundreds of miles into the great hinterland of the Pacific Northwest. The Federal Government in carrying out its uniform policy of improving waterways and water resources over which it has jurisdiction has from time to time carried on developments in the Columbia River. The lower river has been dredged, affording a channel for ocean-going vessels, including warships, to Portland, a distance of some 100 miles from the ocean. The Government has also built jetties and improved the entrance at the mouth of the Columbia and, as you know, it has recently constructed the Bonneville Dam in the Columbia, affording a navigation pool extending eastward to the Celilo Canal, east of The Dalles. The Grand Coulee Dam, now under construction, will increase the minimum low-water flow and stage of the river below the dam, but will not be of material benefit to open-river navigation above The Dalles. The Government has dredged a channel 27 feet deep and 300 feet wide between the Bonneville Dam and Vancouver, Wash., which gives transportation for ocean-going vessels from The Dalles to the sea. Navigation around the falls and rapids at Celilo, extending 12 miles above The Dalles, is afforded by the Celilo Canal, which has a depth of 8 feet and width of 65 feet. The locks are 265 feet long and 45 feet wide. Above the Celilo Canal the Government has recently completed a dredging project affording a 7-foot channel 150 feet wide. The dam to be constructed under this project at Umatilla is the next step in this process of river development for transportation and will complete the navigation facilities of the Columbia River from its mouth to the Snake River.

The Board of Engineers in its report calls attention to the fact that the completion of this whole project of the development of the Columbia and Snake Rivers, will necessarily extend over a considerable period of years, and that the locks and dams should be built in the order which will best meet the most pressing needs of water-borne commerce. In the establishment of through navigation to the Snake River, they recommend that the Umatilla Dam and the four dams proposed for the Snake River should be constructed before undertaking slack water in the Columbia below Umatilla where a fairly adequate channel already exists.

Referring to the recommendation of the district engineer for the development of the Columbia and Snake Rivers, as I have outlined, the Board of Engineers in its report, House Document No. 704, Seventy-fifth Congress, page 12, said:

> The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors concurs in the view that the foregoing plans constitute a satisfactory, comprehensive, and integrated program for the initial and ultimate development of the Columbia and Snake Rivers between Bonneville and Lewistown, Idaho, and that further planning and investigation are neither required nor warranted. The definite savings in transportation costs and to irrigation now in prospect are not in themselves commensurate with the cost of the coordinate improvement, and the large blocks of power susceptible of development at the proposed dams cannot be disposed of advantageously until the output of the Bonneville and Grand Coulee projects has been absorbed. While the immediate tangible benefits are incommensurate with the carrying charges of the undertaking, the Board nevertheless recognizes that the proposed coordinated improvement would stimulate development of the natural resources of a large area in the Pacific Northwest and convey to that region, and to the Nation as a whole, indirect and intangible benefits of sufficient importance to warrant the initiation of construction work in the near future. The Board therefore recommends that the plan presented herein for the coordinated improvement of the Columbia and Snake Rivers from The Dalles to Lewiston, Idaho, by the construction of four locks and dams on each stream supplemented by open-river improvement between the pools of the proposed dams on the Snake, be adopted; the construction of the various elements of this plan to be initiated at such time and prosecuted at such rate as the Congress may direct.

Colonel Robins, division engineer, who is perhaps more familiar with the development of the Columbia River than any other man with reference to this project, said:

> The provision of low-cost water transportation between tidewater and the interior will promote the economic security and future development of agriculture and industry in the Pacific Northwest, and is more or less essential to the success of the Federal projects already undertaken with a view to construction and utilization of water resources in the Columbia Basin.

The development of the Columbia River as a transportation medium will afford a yardstick in measuring transportation costs for the whole Northwest area. This whole area contiguous to the Columbia and Snake Rivers covers such a vast expanse of territory and such a variety of products seeking a market that transportation is a major item in making possible the development. It would seem to be the part of wisdom to continue the plan we have followed through the years of making substantial expenditures from time to time through the recommendations of the Board of Engineers of the Army for the improvement of our waterways. These projects are investments which eventually will return to our people as a whole not only the funds expended in completing these projects but infinitely more in savings as the years go by. It may be true that we cannot place our finger upon particular savings at the present time that would justify the expenditures made in many of the projects that are carried on by the Board of Engineers, but the indirect benefits immediately and direct benefits eventually will more than justify the projects. I think we all realize that in the newer sections of our country, even from our earliest history, it was necessary for the Federal Government in some instances to go ahead of development in order to provide the facilities which would bring about the development of our natural resources. Otherwise, many of our great natural advantages would lie wholly undeveloped. All of our transcontinental railroad systems were obliged to forge ahead of development and afford the means for bringing about the settlement and improvement of our great undeveloped territories of the West.

Mr. Chairman, our people who have resided in the great Northwest area of our country have been dreaming for 20 years of the improvement of the Columbia River. You will recall that it was Thomas Jefferson who early in the nineteenth century commissioned Lewis and Clark to explore this great country. Later our hardy pioneer forebears, who trekked across the continent, following the Oregon Trail, discovered this great waterway, the Columbia, and followed its course to the mouth near Astoria.

As I have said, this river is the second largest in the United States and drains an area one-tenth of that of the United States and as large as the Republic of France. It is approximately 1,200 miles long, and its largest tributary, the Snake, is about 1,000 miles in length. From the days of the pioneers it has played an important part in the commerce of our country. With all of our modern developments, water transportation is still the most economical, and lends itself more readily to the development of industry and agriculture.

As I have said, we have developed a great portion of this waterway now, and there remains this one link, Umatilla Dam, to complete the project from the ocean to Snake River, a distance of approximately 350 miles. Colonel Robins, a member of the Board of Army Engineers, and who was the district engineer when the surveys of this project were made, testified before the committee:

> The indirect benefits from those savings in transportation costs are very great. You cannot state it in dollars and cents, but it means everything to the development of that whole country to get this navigation now without waiting until you can sell all the power. It is a question of whether Congress in its wisdom would authorize this development to get navigation going without waiting for the development of the power, which would absolutely make the project pay out. * * *
> I recommended that this plan be adopted as the authorized plan of procedure on the Columbia River, but that the work be undertaken when Congress sees fit to do it. The Board of Engineers made the same recommendation, and the Chief of Engineers made the same recommendation. In other words, it may very well be that the indirect benefits are more than sufficient to warrant going ahead with the project, giving the people navigation now without having to wait 30 or 40 years until we know that we can sell all the power.

He also said in his report:

> I therefore recommend that the general plans presented herein for the initial and ultimate development of the Columbia and Snake Rivers between the pool of the Bonneville Dam and Lewiston, Idaho, be accepted by the Congress as a general guide for future development of the waterways in the combined interests of navigation, irrigation, and the development of hydroelectric power, and that the Congress authorize from time to time such portions of the plans as it wishes to initiate, revised as may be needed at the time to meet changing conditions.

He further testified at the hearing:

> This should be the next step in that program unquestionably—building the Umatilla Dam. Umatilla is the key to the situation. You cannot get up in the Snake River by open-river methods. The Umatilla Rapids themselves are the biggest obstacle, and then above that there are the Homly Rapids, and it is impossible to improve those rapids by open-river methods at any reasonable cost, and the Umatilla Dam is absolutely essential to any navigation, any through navigation in the Snake River, and it should be the next dam constructed on the Columbia, unquestionably.

We believe that the completion of the Umatilla Dam will do more for the development of the whole Northwest territory by affording cheap transportation to the entire area for the development of industry and agriculture than any other Columbia River project that may be taken up at this time. We most earnestly solicit your support of the measure.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say at the outset of my remarks that I join our colleague in expressing delight and pleasure that we again have with us the distinguished chairman of this committee. I know of no man in all my period of service in Congress who has been more beloved by his colleagues for his character and ability than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] [applause], and I think he is entitled to all the praise that has been bestowed him by his colleagues here today.

In the short time at my disposal I wish to discuss an amendment which it is expected the committee will offer; namely, to include in the bill the improvement of the Connecticut River as recommended by the Board of Engineers in their report, House Document No. 165.

Navigation on the Connecticut River has been a mooted question in western Massachusetts for a long period of years. The broad expanse of the river in the region from Hartford north to Springfield and Holyoke is barren of craft except here and there a pleasure motorboat. It seems incredible that during this long period of years no Federal project has been adopted for transportation by water on this stream. It has always seemed to me as though it were a great waste of natural resource not to have navigation on the Connecticut River. It is unnecessary for me at this time to refer to the numerous surveys and reports that have been made from time to time on this project. It is sufficient to say that practically all of them of which I have knowledge combine navigation and power; in other words, the Board of Engineers have stated frequently that navigation would not be justified unless power were included.

During the period of prosperity of years gone by several efforts were made to use this stream for private power purposes, but that did not materialize. This present report is the first wherein the Army engineers have recommended Federal aid for both navigation and power development.

I must take exception to the remarks of my colleague from Michigan, much as we admire his judgment, when he is quite as severe against Connecticut River power as he is in the remarks he makes today. The fact is that so far as my investigation has gone among my own constituents—and I speak for the people in the State of Massachusetts, not Connecticut—there is no opposition on the part of the power producers. The reason for this is because the amount of power that will be generated at the Enfield Dam is not of sufficient quantity to warrant the power interests, if you wish so to designate them, being interested. I have made a careful investigation along this line and feel that this statement is justified, that the producers of power are satisfied to allow power to be generated at Enfield Falls. Further than that, so far as rates are concerned in Massachusetts, those are sufficiently well controlled by our public utility commission that the interests of the general public are thoroughly protected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I prefer not to, but in deference to the gentleman from Mississippi, if he will not get into an argument——

Mr. RANKIN. I will not.

Mr. TREADWAY. If he wishes to do nothing more than ask a question I will yield, but I do not want to get into an argument.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Michigan complains that under this project they would buy out a small utility there. On the other hand, he complains daily that we build these projects without buying out the local utilities. His proposition of today answers his criticism of yesterday.

Mr. TREADWAY. I told the gentleman when I yielded to him that I did not care to get into an argument at this time, because I wanted to discuss definitely the Connecticut River proposition, and 10 minutes is a very short time in which to do so.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield for a question only.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not a fact that if this project is undertaken the Federal Government and not the States of Connecticut and Massachusetts will be the one to fix the power rate?

Mr. RANKIN. I hope so; then maybe the people of those States will enjoy reasonable rates.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is another debatable question. So far as power rates at the present time are concerned, my constituents in Massachusetts are satisfied with conditions as they are. I am going to let it go at that if I may.

I call attention to the fact that we place great reliance in the Army engineers' reports. They are impartial; they are not political; they are scientific. When, therefore, this Board of Engineers approves a project it is a pretty well-established fact that it is worth while, both from the public's standpoint and the interest of the Federal Government.

There is just one great demand in western Massachusetts and throughout New England, and that is to offer inducements to private business to continue to operate with us. We want to bring to our area new capital and we want more employment for the people who live in that beautiful area. If by securing river navigation, if by securing the power that will be generated at Enfield we can offer these inducements, it certainly will be well worth while.

There is another very outstanding reason for the adoption of the Connecticut River project. No section of the country has suffered more than western Massachusetts from floods. It stands to reason that by dredging the river and straightening the crooked places in it you are going to lessen the damage from floods. In other words, you are going to enable the flood waters to pass out more quickly, and in this way there should not be the same danger from flood. It will reduce the flood stages upstream.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Is it not true that this straightening of the dam will operate to increase the flood stage?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am informed that the amount of increase of the lower reaches will be practically infinitesimal. It will offer a great opportunity for the extra flood waters to find a way out to sea and in that way lower the danger of extended floods in our area. Therefore, it seems to me that we would be repaying the Government expenditure in large measure by the additional protection to property and people that this appropriation would make.

I have one invariable rule, Mr. Chairman, in dealing with problems of this kind, particularly where a local community is interested. I consult my constituents. When this bill was up for hearing before the Rivers and Harbors Committee some weeks ago, my constituents showed an interest in its favorable report.

When the question of reconsideration came up, some opposition developed among my constituents, and I reported the opposition at the second hearing of the committee. Since then I have been in close touch with my people, and while some of them, my personal and intimate friends as well as prominent citizens, are opposed to the inclusion of the Connecticut River proposition in this bill, I find that the greater number of them, by far the greater number of my constituents, and particularly those directly affected in the city of Holyoke, are strongly in favor of the Connecticut River amendment being adopted.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I intend to support the amendment and hope when the amendment is offered as a committee amendment by the committee it will be favorably received by the House. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to append copy of telegram received by me which seems to be representative of the sentiment in the city of Holyoke. The message is as follows:

HOLYOKE, MASS., May 16, 1939.

CONGRESSMAN ALLEN T. TREADWAY: The Holyoke Industrial Development Committee, made up of representatives of the board of aldermen, the chamber of commerce, the American Legion, Real Estate Owners' Association, the junior chamber of commerce, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and including in its component parts industrialists, merchants, property owners, bankers, and taxpayers, is unanimously recorded as in favor of Connecticut River navigation. Your support is solicited in the interest of industrial growth and progress.

JAMES J. DOWD, Chairman.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

TENNESSEE-TOMBIGBEE INLAND WATERWAY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I was interested to note that when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] brought out a map of the State of Washington, the entire delegation from Washington moved down to the front to protect that great section of this Republic. They are all here. [Applause.]

I shall not have time to answer all the arguments put forth by the gentleman from Michigan, but I want to speak for a short time about one of the projects which he stated he believed is "without sin," or at least he has failed to accuse it of any sin. That is the proposed Tennessee-Tombigbee Inland Waterway to connect the Tennessee River with the Tombigbee, which will give us an inland waterway down to Mobile.

The Tennessee River is on a plateau 125 feet above the Tombigbee. The head of navigation on the Tombigbee is only a few miles away from the Pickwick Dam on the Tennessee River. By connecting those streams they can give us a waterway all the way down to Mobile. What will this mean? It will not only give us a river here completely controlled, and relieve that great area here from the floods that have been devastating their lands in recent years, it will not only give a section of the country transportation that is now without adequate transportation, but it will open up the greatest wealth of natural resources to be found almost anywhere in the world.

In this area is the world's reserve supply of hardwood timber, the world's reserve supply of slash pine, the world's reserve supply of iron ore.

It will also open up a field of ceramic clay which has been discovered within the last 5 years, containing millions of tons, yet today the ceramic clay out of which our pottery and china is made is imported from foreign countries.

It will open an area that contains bauxite, from which aluminum is made, and this will be a deposit on which there will not be a monopoly.

It will open up a field of limestone, hundreds of millions of tons; hundreds of millions of tons of rock asphalt that is needed for building streets and roads, which must have cheap transportation in order to be carried any distance.

In addition to all that, it will open up to this great agricultural area here that transportation we had many years ago before it was destroyed and driven from the streams.

Now, as to the effect, let me show the distances. The distance from the mouth of Yellow Creek here at the Pickwick Dam to Cairo, Ill., is 261 miles. From Cairo to Mobile is 755 miles, making 1,291 miles. From Pickwick Lake down the Tombigbee River it is only 494 miles, or a little more than one-third the distance.

In addition to that, it shortens the distance from all points on the Ohio River to the Gulf of Mexico by 200 miles and shortens the distance from points on the Ohio River up to Pittsburgh, Pa., to Mobile by 370 miles. It shortens the water distance from all points on the upper Mississippi River, even from Chicago, Ill., to the Gulf of Mexico, by 108 miles. It shortens the water distance from all those points down to Mobile by 278 miles.

Now, that could not have been possible until this dam was built, lifting the water 55 or 60 feet and giving us Pickwick Lake as the summit reservoir from which to draw the water to run these locks.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is the Pickwick Landing Dam completed?

Mr. RANKIN. It is completed now. It will shorten the water distance from all points up the Tennessee River, to above Knoxville, to Mobile by 797 miles.

In addition, it will give a slack-water route for ascending traffic. It is more than 900 miles from New Orleans to Cairo. Ascending traffic has to fight the most difficult current. But on this project here they will be traveling in slack water up the Tombigbee River until the traffic reaches the Tennessee, then it will be going down stream to Cairo. It will be of inestimable benefit to this great area, as well as to people along the Tombigbee River, for this to be opened up especially to the returning traffic into all this territory here.

I know it has been charged that these waterways were putting railroad men out of work. We had that question before the committee. Every time an inland waterway has been developed it has stimulated business and instead of putting railroad men out of work it has increased railroad traffic and railroad employment. In addition, the Army engineers are at work up in here now on a great flood-control project. They are waiting to see about the adoption of this project to know just where to draw their lines in straightening this stream, in order that it may fit into the great plan they have proposed.

This is not a new question. I went before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors 5 years ago. General Markham was the Chief of Army engineers at that time. I said to him:

Check me, and if I make a misstatement I want you to correct it.

When I got through he rose and said:

There is only one question that I have in mind, and that is whether or not it is economically feasible.

In this report presented by the Army engineers the other day they show it is amply justified from an economic standpoint.

Again General Markham said, "We will have it investigated," and a special board of five Army engineers put in 5 years studying this question. You talk about investigations—if we could get all legislation investigated as carefully as this has been by men who are as honest and as sincere and as capable as the Army engineers, we would get along a great deal better in this House. They put in 5 years and searched everything from one end of it to the other. They drilled probably thousands of artesian wells. They also examined every phase of the traffic. Finally they returned a report, which you will find in the hearings, in which they recommended this project. The special board sent the report to the General Board of Army Engineers, and they approved it, and then they sent it to the President of the United States, and he sends it here with his approval. The matter came before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, they investigated it from every standpoint, it was overwhelmingly voted into this bill, and the bill was voted out by a unanimous vote.

Now, that is the story. That is this great inland waterway that we are talking about, that will benefit not only the people here but traffic throughout this entire area from Pittsburgh, from Youngstown, from St. Paul, from Minneapolis, and from Chicago and all the other points on the Great Lakes.

It is one of the greatest inland waterways in the world for the amount of money it will cost. The Army engineers have said time and time again that it is the outstanding project they have ever found where they can transfer the traffic from one major watershed to another with so little expense, with so much ease, with the saving of so much distance, and with the saving of so much effort and so much fuel on the part of those who transport goods by water carriers.

That is all I have to say. I trust there will be no opposition to this provision in the bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, you have been told that the committee would later offer an amendment to include the Connecticut River power and navigation project, at a cost of between $12,000,000 and $13,000,000, and an annual maintenance cost of $193,000. I am in the unique, if not unusual, position here of opposing a project, despite the fact that 90 percent of the sum carried in this amendment will be spent in my own district. This is not a new project. The Army engineers have made seven reports on the question of opening the Connecticut River to navigation between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass., in the last 25 years. The residents of my district are opposing this project for several reasons.

Certainly in 5 minutes I cannot give you all these reasons, but they concern themselves with three major groups.

Those who live in the Connecticut River Valley are concerned by the statement in the Army engineers' report that this project will increase flood crests at various points from three-tenths to eight-tenths of a foot. You can see there will be little increase. Three-tenths of a foot or eight-tenths of a foot or five-tenths of a foot may not be much in some places, but on the end of your nose it is a lot, and when the water is lapping at your kitchen door three-tenths or eight-tenths of a foot is a lot. If in 1938 the Connecticut River had gone three-tenths of a foot higher, the damage would have been millions of dollars greater for the reason that they kept ahead of the rise of the river on the existing Colt's dike by building a temporary sandbag dike, using 1,000 W. P. A. workers and another 1,000 voluntary workers. If at that midnight the water had kept going up, it would have gone over that temporary dike and the damage to industrial property would have been terrific. So you cannot belittle three-tenths or eight-tenths of a foot.

Not a single representative of the State of Connecticut has appeared before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in favor of this bill. I have here with me a strong letter from the Governor of the State of Connecticut protesting against this project on the ground that it is uneconomical, unsound, and not desirable. Fifteen or sixteen witnesses came down here representing farmers' organizations, property owners in the valley, the Connecticut Chamber of Commerce, the Hartford Chamber of Commerce, the selectmen of the towns between Hartford and the State line, and representatives of our general assembly, and without exception they were all opposed to the project. I may point out that we have between the city of Hartford and the Massachusetts State line seven towns, and if anybody were going to benefit by navigation they would benefit, two of them being industrial, Windsor Locks and Thompsonville. Without exception they are opposed to this project.

Now, you will perhaps be told that we in Connecticut are opposed to this because we do not want our good friends to the north to have river transportation. This is rather far-fetched because there are comparatively few competitive industries in that area. We have in Hartford aircraft factories, Colt's firearms, and two large typewriter factories, while in Holyoke, as I understand, it is largely textile and paper manufacturing.

The question of the economic justification for this project was discussed before the committee and it was brought out that, according to the Army engineers' report, 80 percent of the justification related to the transportation of petroleum products. Since that hearing was held permission has been granted to give a right-of-way to one of the major oil companies to put in a pipe line between Hartford and Springfield, which would do away with a good deal of the need of river transportation for oil barges, and would thereby destroy what was admitted by the Army engineers to be 80 percent of the justification.

In the 1 minute remaining I want to point this fact out to you. It was testified by the committee that while we have a channel 150 feet wide and 15 feet deep from the ocean to Hartford, less than 5 percent of the incoming and outgoing freight into the city of Hartford, with the exception of petroleum products, goes over the river. In 1931 the only boat line running between Hartford and New York went out of business because of lack of patronage and lack of freight to take to New York and the cities along the sound. Why should we believe that by extending navigation 22 miles up the river, the area painted blue on this map, the people in Springfield, Holyoke, and Chicopee would make use of this project while this area in the city of Hartford and on down that has the navigation is not using it now or is using it very, very little. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the young gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I wish to pay my respects to the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I remember how kind he was 2 years ago when we had up the Bonneville legislation. At that time I was taken to the hospital for a major operation, and I shall always remember that when I came back I found he had embodied in the bill, which became the law, practically all the ideas that were so dear to me. He and I have many things in common. He was one of the first men I became acquainted with when I came to the National Capital. He and I were born in the same year. He is 3 months older, and like an elder brother he claims the right to instruct me.

Mr. MANSFIELD. You are 3 months younger.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. And I often take those instructions and I am glad to appear before his committee, where I always receive most excellent treatment.

I am here on this particular occasion to defend Umatilla Dam. Our colleague from Michigan and I have had a few tilts in the past on the subject of power. He lives in the same building as I do, just across the hall and on the same floor. Affable and genial, I like our friend from Michigan very much personally, but on the question of power we are as far apart as the poles. I believe in public ownership of power cooperatively distributed and developed by State or Nation. I was in the power business for several years. I know the game and I shall take great pleasure in replying to his speech when I have had time to digest the figures and the statements he made. I shall read them carefully in the RECORD tomorrow morning. So I challenge him to a debate upon this subject. I want a few days to hunt up the answers to all the erroneous figures that I heard the genial gentleman, the defender of the Power Trust, give us a few minutes ago.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Not now.

Umatilla Dam is not a power project, and it is not an irrigation project. It is for navigation only. Colonel Robins, when on the witness stand before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, did not know what an adroit, brilliant lawyer our friend from Michigan is.

He asked him directly this question, and it will be found in the hearings at page 14:

> To reduce it to percentages, navigation is about 20 percent of the project and power about 80 percent.
> Colonel ROBINS. On the economic side; yes.

That does not leave Colonel Robins in the proper light nor give the complete impression he intended to convey. You have to read his entire testimony before you can give Colonel Robins, of the Army Engineers, a fair hearing. He never intended to say that the project was 80 percent power. It is not for power at all: it is for navigation. The Umatilla Rapids Dam is halfway between Bonneville and Coulee and 150 miles above Bonneville. It is the key that unlocks the river.

The river there for 14,000 feet flows very swiftly, and it falls 24 feet in that distance. You cannot navigate it, and while there can be an immense amount of power developed at that point, it is not the intention now to develop it, but it is all for navigation. Why navigation? To open up that great inland empire, the same as we have opened up the Mississippi Valley, so that craft can go up the river. Seventy-five percent of all the traffic of the inland empire originates at Umatilla or above. The river is now dredged, or being dredged, from Vancouver to Bonneville for river traffic. The canals around the Celilo rapids, above The Dalles, have been building for years and in order to justify that we have to have the Umatilla dam.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, we of the Pacific Northwest have supported in Congress the great development projects of other sections of the country, rejoicing in every forward move. We have acquiesced in the demands of the South, the East, and the great Middle West. Our section is thinly populated, giving us but few voices here in Congress. Our numbers are few in response to the call of the House roll. Our section is practically the last frontier where pioneering is not yet finished. We will appreciate more than words can tell the continuation of the friendly attitude which has been shown us by so many Members of this House. Our situation is briefly and clearly expressed in the oft-quoted saying of the under-privileged one: "If my cup won't hold but a pint, and your'n holds a quart, wouldn't ye be mean not to let me have my little half measure full?"

You will notice that there are 34 pages of projects in the river and harbor report before you, and just one of those pages is devoted to the four projects for Oregon and Washington, which have two each.

We of Oregon and Washington are vitally interested in the Umatilla Dam item in the river and harbor bill. This dam on the Columbia River is the key which will unlock the resources of the great inland empire. It is also the key to the utilization of the public works improvements already completed or under way on the Columbia River. It is needed in order to render most beneficial far into the future the investments in Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams.

Umatilla Dam will result in submerging rapids which have proved insurmountable obstacles to efficient navigation. Its construction will make possible water navigation into the very center of the greatest irrigation project of the future now being built at Grand Coulee. There, in a wild, unprofitable stretch of desert, will bloom a new civilization. The thousands of farm families which will live on these irrigated tracts will add to the pay rolls of your factories, as they will demand buildings, utensils, machinery, and all the things for which farm earnings are always spent. On the Coulee project alone there will probably be built 30,000 houses, which will need lumber, plumbing, fixtures, pumps, garages, cars, fencing, paint, refrigerators, electric ranges. Other sections will furnish most of these necessities. This Coulee project has had the approval of Congress and is making unprecedented progress in construction. Its ultimate success is dependent upon this other smaller construction at Umatilla Rapids, which will release the river for human service.

The only objections which I have ever heard are economy and the fear of other transportation agencies that they may lose some business. Our colleague from Mississippi has brought to your attention the fact that railroad men have never lost jobs nor wages because of river and harbor developments. It is especially true in this case that the project will aid all forms of transportation, because the improvements will stimulate business, with the railroads profiting richly from the long hauls, the trucks sharing in the short hauls, and the waterway making it possible for agricultural producers to carry on their business, from which so many others will derive profit. Not only will there be trainloads of materials moving westward now, but long-haul westward freight traffic will continue through all the years to come.

The real economy of this authorization lies in the fact that it will make most useful other expenditures already made. It is the tie that will bind and strengthen developments between Bonneville and Grand Coulee, where Umatilla lies, closer than any other dam to the geographical center of the Pacific Northwest. Of first importance to us will be the immediate direct employment of at least 2,500 men with families and many more thousands indirectly. The project is all ready to go.

I am hoping and believing that we of the far Northwest will receive that same vote of confidence which has been so often extended to us since I have been a Member of this Congress. Help us to put the desert on the tax rolls. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise to thank the committee for including a very meritorious item in this bill for the survey of the St. Marys River, Ohio and Ind. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee has been very wise in including the survey of the St. Marys River, and I want the Members of the House to know our problem.

The St. Marys River rises near the town of St. Marys, Ohio, and flows northwest to Fort Wayne, Ind., where it unites with the St. Joseph River to form the Maumee River. It is about 100 miles long and drains an area of about 800 square miles in northwestern Ohio and northeastern Indiana. The total fall of the river is about 240 feet, but throughout the lower 40 miles the slope averages only about 6 inches to the mile. The old Miami and Erie Canal parallels the river for about 15 miles near St. Marys. This canal has been abandoned for many years.

The river is tortuous and its bed is full of very tough grass and contains numerous bars and islands, all of which serve to reduce the discharge capacity of the river at high stages. The surrounding country is practically barren of forests, and large areas of farm lands have been drained by tile and by county ditches, which tend to increase the rapidity of the run-off. As a result of these unfavorable conditions a continuous rainfall of 1 inch causes an overflow of the banks and a rainfall of 2 inches causes damaging floods.

Approximately 65,000 acres of bottom land is subject to floods. Of this acreage about half is flooded several times each year, the remaining half being affected only by the more severe floods, such as occur about once in 5 years. The basements of buildings near the river in St. Marys are flooded every year and an appreciable area in St. Marys is flooded once in 4 or 5 years.

It has been estimated that complete flood control of the St. Marys River would increase the value of agricultural lands, now intermittently flooded, by $70 an acre. I have confidence that the survey will show that these floods can be completely controlled.

It is estimated that approximately 65,000 acres extended over the entire length of the river are subject to floods. Of this acreage about 35,000 acres are flooded several times each year. The remaining 30,000 acres are affected when more severe floods occur approximately every 5 years.

Once in 4 or 5 years a sizeable area in St. Marys is flooded. Agriculture is principally affected by the floods; damage causes decrease in the value of lands and the annual destruction of crops, roads and buildings, and so forth.

The people of my district owning lands and living close to this river will deeply appreciate the action of this Congress in giving them a survey which will make it possible for the river to be cleaned out in the event the survey is favorable.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON] the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, it is somewhat difficult to open up a large problem in the short time allotted to me, but I would be certainly remiss if I did not do justice to the kindness shown to me by the chairman and the members of the great Committee on Rivers and Harbors in connection with the hearings on the project from Hartford to Holyoke. Everyone, including the clerk, Mr. McCann, has been peculiarly kind to me, and I am glad to have this opportunity to tell them how much I appreciate it.

A few statements have been made which I do not feel should go without some answer. First of all, mention is made of the woman who came down with a petition of 600 names and appeared against this project. She was here solely—if not solely, practically so—on the ground that she was afraid that the two dams to be constructed on this project would increase the height of the flood waters. In connection with that, during the course of the hearings the Acting Chief of Engineers, Brigadier General Tyler, made a report by letter to the chairman of the committee in which he stated:

> I can assure you that if the project as recommended is approved by Congress, the Hartford Dam, as well as the Enfield Dam, will be constructed with suitable and sufficient gates to pass flood waters without appreciable increase in the customary flood height.

This amendment provides for the construction of works necessary to secure navigation from Hartford, Conn., the present head of navigation on the Connecticut River, to Holyoke, Mass., and also provides for the generation of electricity at one of the two dams to be built. The project is recommended by the Army engineers in House Document No. 165 of this session of Congress. Full hearings have been held before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, which approved the project by a vote of 14 to 4. I believe that this overwhelming vote in favor of this amendment by the committee, who are fully cognizant of the facts in the case, should have great weight with all Members of this House. The project provides for the construction of one dam 1½ miles above Hartford for navigation only and another dam at Enfield Rapids, near the Massachusetts-Connecticut State line, and about equally distant from Springfield, Mass., and Hartford, Conn., for the dual purposes of navigation and power. The total Federal cost would be $12,410,900. Owners of five bridges will be required to modify them, at a total expense of $383,600, with annual carrying charges of $29,700. Two of these bridges are owned by the New Haven Railroad, one by the State of Connecticut, and two by the counties in which they are located. The cities of Holyoke, Chicopee, and Springfield have agreed to provide terminal facilities at a cost of $300,000, making the total cost of the entire project $13,094,500. This entire project is authorized at the present time by the Rivers and Harbors Act of July 3, 1930, modified by the act of August 30, 1935. Two important changes are made in the present law by this amendment. First, under the present law, the State of Connecticut, a municipality, or a private corporation is permitted to build the dam for the dual purposes of power and navigation at Enfield Rapids, but the Federal Government is not authorized to do so. On February 1, 1928, a license to construct a dam at Enfield Rapids was issued to the Northern Connecticut Power Co. and was terminated on September 30, 1931, because the licensee failed to start construction within a prescribed period of time. For at least 9 years since the passage of the present law the public-utility interests of Connecticut have failed to act under its terms, although they have expanded their power-generating facilities greatly. The Army engineers recommend that the project be carried out by the United States over a period of 3 years. As money would not be available to start work before 1940, power would not be generated until 1943 at the Enfield Dam. The power plant would have an installed capacity of 29,500 kilowatts, producing approximately 170,927,000 kilowatt-hours annually. Second, under the present law, changes in bridges are required at a cost of $3,263,000, with annual carrying charges of $286,600. This amendment will cut the cost of such charges by $2,879,400, with annual charges of $29,700. More than 80 percent of the traffic, which would be carried by water up to Holyoke, now comes to a New England port by ship and is transferred by truck or pipe line to Springfield, Chicopee, and Holyoke.

Four issues have been presented by this project. First, effect on flood control: The Army engineers have disposed of this issue by a statement in writing from the Chief of Engineers, Brigadier General Tyler, stating that both dams will be so constructed that neither will raise the heighth of waters in flood time appreciably. Witnesses who came to the hearing and raised this point have stated that they are satisfied that this problem will betaken care of. Second, navigation: The Army engineers show, on page 17 of their report that tonnage on the river below Hartford has been increasing steadily from 1927 to 1936 from 592,000 tons to 1,074,000 tons. They estimate the potential water-borne commerce from Hartford to Holyoke annually at 607,600 tons, with annual savings of $382,600—page 18 of the report. On the same page they refer to a navigation study made under a W. P. A. project, with trained personnel, who visited 2,002 merchants and manufacturers in Holyoke, Chicopee, Springfield, and West Springfield, and reported that an annual river tonnage of 1,147,000 should be expected, with annual savings of $1,467,000. The Army engineers have certainly been conservative by reducing that figure by more than $1,000,000 a year. Congress has already decided by its present law that the benefits from navigation warrant the construction of this project. This continuing increase in water-borne tonnage since the law was passed in 1930 makes the project even more advantageous at the present time. Third issue, power: Local interests have had more than 10 years in which to construct this dam. Therefore, there should not be further delay so far as they are concerned. The Army engineers estimate that the power will be sold for $593,900 annually. This amount is only a drop in the bucket of the power market which can be served from this dam. Within 100 miles of it more than 15,000,000 persons live. Within that distance lie the entire States of Connecticut and Rhode Island, together with most of Massachusetts, and a large part of New York. It includes the cities of New York, Boston, Albany, Providence, Worcester, Springfield, Hartford, New Haven, and many other leading industrial cities. Right now Springfield sells $275,000 worth of power annually from its water works to a public utility. That power is absorbed without difficulty. Likewise, the comparatively small amount of power to be generated at Enfield would be absorbed in the greatest consumers' market in the world, which exists about this dam. The consumption of electricity is higher than ever before this year. The Federal Power Commission has definitely shown that there will be a market for this power in the area immediately adjacent to the dam by the time the dam is built. Last year, during the depression, the Hartford Electric Light Co. found it necessary to install a larger steam plant than this proposed dam. New England, and for that matter the whole United States, is increasing its consumption of electricity per capita at a fast rate.

If no utility company in Connecticut wants this power, a ready market will be found for it somewhere in this area. No one is compelling any particular company to buy it. The Connecticut power companies are opposing this project. The reason perhaps lies in the tables prepared by the Federal Power Commission, where it indicates that in the 21 large cities of Massachusetts and Connecticut, Holyoke, at one end of this project, has the lowest rates to its smallest consumers, while Hartford has next to the highest. Holyoke charges $1 for the same service that Hartford requires $1.75. The utilities serving these two cities pay approximately the same percentage of income as taxes. If Hartford gave as much electricity for the same amount of money as Holyoke, it would use up all of the power generated at this dam without difficulty.

Fourth issue: Recreational advantages which will be derived from this project. Little stress has been paid to them because the power issue has been raised. We should not lose sight of the fact that the Connecticut Valley is one of the outstanding beauty spots of New England, a land much sought by tourists from all over the world. The Connecticut River is the largest river in New England. From Holyoke to Hartford, it carries much sewage and industrial waste. It is broad but shallow, and filled with many sand bars. At one time a steamboat made its way from the sound up into Vermont. Dams now prevent its continuous passage. The present lock near Enfield is so unsatisfactory as to prevent even pleasure craft from attempting to ascend the river above Hartford. At present Hartford, Springfield, Northampton, and other places on the river have built, or are contemplating the construction of, sewage-disposal plants, which will again make this river one of the outstanding features for recreation in western New England. This project would result in the furnishing of a deep yet broad river, suitable for all kinds of sports as well as for navigation. Undoubtedly many thousands of dollars would again be spent for pleasure along the river between Hartford and Holyoke if this project is carried out, while the advantages for the health of the large communities along its banks would be untold. This issue should not be overlooked in arriving at a decision on this project.

In conclusion, I would again call to your attention that the Connecticut River is the largest river in the United States not properly canalized at the present time. This is not an attempt to develop new industries in a new country. The banks of this river are thickly populated the entire distance of 32 miles from Hartford to Holyoke with 450,000 persons. It is already one of the greatest industrial and munitions centers in our Nation. It needs navigation in order that its industries may furnish finished products at the lowest prices possible to the consuming public of the United States. It needs the power to be generated at the Enfield Dam because there is insufficient power used in western New England per person of population. Western Massachusetts needs the benefits to health which will come from the recreational facilities afforded by its completion. It will furnish another form of transportation in time of war—an important defense measure. Above all, the carrying out of this project will not cost the taxpayers of the United States a single dollar, as ultimately the Treasury will be reimbursed in cash more than 100 cents for each dollar expended. We are told that this is the outstanding project of its kind to be carried out in the United States. It should be enacted into law at the earliest possible moment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following works of improvement of rivers, harbors, and other waterways are hereby adopted and authorized, to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers, in accordance with the plans recommended in the respective reports hereinafter designated and subject to the conditions set forth in such documents; and that hereafter all duties now performed by the Chief of Engineers under the direction of the Secretary of War shall be functions of the Engineer Corps, United States Army, and its head to be administered under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, except as otherwise specifically provided by act of Congress:

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: Page 8, strike out, beginning with line 17, down to and including line 22.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered to strike out of the bill the project known as the Umatilla Dam. It is shown in the bill seeking an initial authorization of $23,700,000. The entire project, as I said earlier in the day, means a commitment for an ultimate expenditure of $177,000,000. So that the Members of the House will understand what kind of an inland empire we are constructing in the Northwest—Oregon and Washington—may I just review briefly for you some facts: The Bonneville Dam will cost about $75,000,000, and $54,000,000 has already been expended. The Grand Coulee Dam will cost $394,000,000, on which $116,000,000 has already been expended, leaving $277,000,000 yet to come.

This proposal is nothing more nor less than a power proposal. Colonel Robins, of the engineers, stated over and over again that without power attached to this project it could not stand or be economically justified. It is located halfway between Grand Coulee and Bonneville. There is no reason in the world why power should be established at this dam when great blocks of power to be generated at Bonneville and Grand Coulee have not yet been sold. But that is not all of the picture. Above Umatilla Dam on the Snake River, a branch of the Columbia River, three more dams are contemplated, and, with this dam, total $933,000,000 more, with an average annual estimate for maintenance of $47,000,000.

That is the kind of picture presented here today. More than a billion and a half dollars involved in this inland empire of the Northwest, yet in all the history of this Republic we have spent only $2,300,000,000 on all river and harbor improvements in the United States. That is the kind of thing you are asked to vote on here today. It is for you to say whether or not, in face of the economic conditions existing in this country, you are willing to take this first step toward the Treasury and commit this Nation to another proposition involving $177,000,000.

The engineers plainly stated in their report to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and Colonel Robins took the floor before our committee and said the same thing, that this project could not be justified at the present time as long as the power at Grand Coulee and Bonneville was not sold. It is to be generated there some day if people move into that territory, but now you want to build this additional dam when it is not needed. Frankly, this money is to build the foundations for a dam on which to develop power. Navigation is about 20 percent, but in reality it averages nearer 15 percent. If we vote for this project, all we are doing is driving the United States into a policy of producing power in a region where it is not needed or wanted at the present time, where there is no necessity for it, and at the expense of the taxpayers of the Nation, at a time when the Treasury is empty and we are in dire stress financially.

Perhaps the loose financial policy of other governments has caused their wreck and ruin. It may cause the wreck and ruin of our own country if we continue to authorize expenditures of money that involve huge and staggering sums, almost beyond the comprehension of the human mind, for things that are not necessary from the standpoint of navigation, irrigation, health, safety, or national defense. This ought to be laid aside until such time as it can be shown that people live there who need and can use this power. I hope this amendment will be adopted and that you will strike from this bill this enormous project—not $23,700,000, but $177,000,000. This is the first step. When once committed to it and you legalize this project, remember, you have to go through with it, because it seems to be the custom when the United States Government is committed to a folly it goes through and completes it, no matter what the cost may be to the taxpayers of the Nation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I never heard in the same length of time so many misstatements, so many misinterpretations of the facts in my life. I would like the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]. I would like to talk straight to him.

To begin with, Bonneville is a navigation and power project. It is already built. Of its cost, one-half or more has been allocated by the Federal Power Commission to navigation. The power of Bonneville will all be taken in Portland and vicinity if the rates are kept where Administrator Ross had them; and then they will not use as much electric energy per installed meter per year as they are using at Winnipeg, Canada.

Much of the power at Grand Coulee will be used at the pumping plant. That project is for irrigation and power. Under it a million and a quarter acres are to be irrigated.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Not now, please.

Under that Coulee project practically all of the money is invested for irrigation. We are not arguing that case. There are no figures on earth from the engineers, or anywhere else, by which the gentleman from Michigan can substantiate a cost of $177,000,000 for Umatilla Rapids Dam—a clear misapprehension. The discussion in the Secretary of War's report is of "the coordinated improvement" for "navigation, irrigation, and power" covering a tremendous acreage for irrigation, and the production not now even being mentioned or contemplated in connection with this project. By adroit, shrewd questioning in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the gentleman did get from Colonel Robins a statement that Robins never intended to make. [Laughter.] If you will read all of the hearings and honestly interpret them, you will find that Robins never intended to convey the impression that Umatilla was for power or irrigation. It is for navigation only. True, when they build the dam they are going to put in the foundations for power in case it is needed ultimately. Such construction is wisely a matter of routine at this time.

Forty percent of all the hydroelectric power in the United States is on this one river, the Columbia, and its tributaries. In time it will be developed, and there will be a big population there. In that inland empire of Grand Coulee and Snake River lands there will live half a million people. The only intention now is to give us some relief from the terrific freight rates that short-sightedly Wall Street insists upon imposing upon us. When my own boy went as a volunteer in the World War I could ship a bushel of wheat from my ranch to Tidewater for less than 10 cents a bushel. Today the rate has been jumped to over 20 cents a bushel. They have doubled our freight rates. This is to lower the freight rates on millions of bushels of wheat, 75 percent of which accumulates at Umatilla and above.

Umatilla Dam is a part of the great river improvement program, that is all; and there is no intention of developing power at this time. There is no justification for any such figures as quoted by the gentleman from Michigan as the cost of the dam at Umatilla Rapids. It is not to be found in any report if properly interpreted and understood. The larger figures he quotes were for an extensive navigation, irrigation, and power scheme not now requested nor even contemplated. The completed Umatilla Dam project now requested is estimated by Army engineers to cost $23,700,000, and this may be reduced by use of Bonneville power. The whole project of the Snake River is another question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. If the gentleman will put his questions in the RECORD, I will answer them.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire 2 additional minutes to answer the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Yes; I will try to answer whatever question he may ask.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. I call the gentleman's attention to the letter from the Secretary of War, found on page 10, House Document No. 704, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, which states:

> The Umatilla Dam will cost $177,000,000; annual cost, $9,000,000; annual navigation benefits, $955,000; annual cost chargeable to power, $7,835,000.

There is the source of my $177,000,000 figure.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The gentleman misconstrued what they intended. Those tables apply to the Army engineers' report on an old bill and a plan of magnificent proportions long since abandoned. Those figures do not apply to the navigation project under discussion.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman contend that the gentleman who made the remarks did not intend to make them?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. No; he was referring to a different project. Navigation alone is now included.

Mr. DONDERO. But the four dams the gentleman refers to will amount to $933,000,000.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. No; they will not. But we are not asking for them. If they should ever be requested, there will be a very different estimate.

Mr. DONDERO. The figures are right before the gentleman. This dam alone at Umatilla will cost $177,000,000.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. That is not the fact. The dam at Umatilla will amount to $23,700,000.

Mr. DONDERO. That is for the foundation authorization.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, when I heard my distinguished friend from Michigan discussing this matter I thought we should examine the report of the Board of Army Engineers. I read what the report of the engineers on this project contains, with all due respect to my distinguished colleague. On page 37 of the report will be found all these projects listed separately and the amount they will cost and the amount of this authorization. For the Umatilla Dam—this is from page 37 of House Document No. 704, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session—the Umatilla Dam, the complete cost is $23,700,000.

The figures my friend from Michigan has in mind and is parading before you are not included in this bill. They are not included in the Umatilla Dam project; they are not before this body in any respect. The only thing you are asked to vote upon with reference to this particular item is the Umatilla Dam, and it is to be completed at this cost, $23,700,000. The other dams the gentleman spoke of are miles up the Snake River or down the Columbia, and this bill has nothing to do with those projects.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield, gladly.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not a fact that the total cost is $177,000,000? Will not that be the final cost?

Mr. ANGELL. No, that is not the fact.

Mr. DONDERO. Then the figures given by the Secretary of War are wrong.

Mr. ANGELL. The figures given by the Secretary of War are absolutely correct and are listed here, and I call the gentleman's attention to them. He will find the Umatilla project listed at $23,700,000. The other dams are other projects not included in this bill.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to my esteemed colleague from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. This is all for carrying on irrigation 50 years from now and he is trying to bring it in now.

Mr. ANGELL. I thank you, Governor, for your observation. Mr. Chairman, considerable has been said with reference to the alleged fact that this is a power project. The whole argument of the gentleman from Michigan is that this is a power project. He says he is for it if it is not a power project. So he is for this project, because it has no power in it, although he does not know it, and I will prove it by the testimony given before the committee.

Colonel Robins appeared and testified before our committee. He is a member of the Board of Army Engineers. He was the district engineer who made the survey and report and knows more about this project than anyone else.

The exact quotation I want to bring to your attention is on page 12 of the hearings before the committee. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] asked this question:

> How much of this $23,000,000 is allocated for the generation of power?

That is the question my colleague asked Mr. Robins. The gentleman states that this is a power proposition. He relies upon the Army engineers. He has great faith in them. So do I; so do all of us. That is the question he asked Colonel Robins, and here is Colonel Robin's answer as to how much of the $23,000,000 involved power. Colonel Robins said, "None."

Mr. DONDERO. Read the rest of that line.

Mr. ANGELL. He said:

> There will be just the foundation for the powerhouse.

Here is his complete answer. I will read the question and answer which I was reading when interrupted:

> Mr. DONDERO. How much of this $23,000,000 is allocated for the generation of power?
> Colonel ROBINS. None. There will be just the foundation for the powerhouse.

Here is an answer given by Colonel Robins on page 16:

> Colonel ROBINS. The great need for the project is for navigation and not for power.
> Mr. ANGELL. There is no power involved in this proposal before the committee now, is there, Colonel Robins?
> Colonel ROBINS. No, sir; not a bit.
> Mr. ANGELL. It is purely navigation?
> Colonel ROBINS. The estimate of $23,000,000 for constructing the Umatilla Dam is entirely aside from power facilities, except the foundation for the powerhouse, which really forms part of the dam.

As I understand it, a rule has been adopted by the Army engineers that they will not construct a dam on any river where there are power possibilities without putting in a foundation for future power development in the event it may be needed later.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I would like to know if the gentleman will yield to me in order to put one-half page of Colonel Robins' testimony in the RECORD, inasmuch as he has quoted some of it?

Mr. ANGELL. Certainly.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I think all of it should go in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, in a nutshell the whole proposition is this: We have the great Columbia River, which, as I said a moment ago, is the second largest river in the United States. We have a very considerable development there for water transportation which has been going on for a good many years. We have recently completed the Bonneville Dam, in which there are sea locks and this has opened up river transportation for seagoing vessels from the mouth of the Columbia River as far as The Dalles. This project has to do with navigation only, not power. The desire is to build only a dam at Umatilla Rapids, so that navigation on the Columbia River may be extended from The Dalles, its uppermost part of the present sea-wide transportation facility that has been provided by Bonneville, up to the mouth of the Snake or a short distance beyond, a distance of some 350 miles. This will bring it in contact with the development at Grand Coulee and furnish transportation for Idaho, Montana, eastern Oregon, and eastern Washington. It is purely and simply a navigation proposition.

My friend from Michigan could very well say that we are gong to spend $177,000,000 for some future authorization and include also the St. Lawrence River. He might as well include the project that we have under consideration down in Florida, or any other project.

The only thing before us and the only thing contemplated is the completion of one single dam, and there is nothing else to be done in connection with it to complete the project. It stands on its own feet. It will be absolutely complete if nothing further is done with the project when the $23,700,000 is spent on it. Then water transportation will be provided from the mouth of the Columbia River to the Snake River, which will open up that great inland empire out there. It is not in any sense of the word a power project.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. Does the gentleman mean to say that the building of this one dam will provide a sufficient depth of water for 300 miles of navigation?

Mr. ANGELL. That is what the Army engineers say.

Mr. THORKELSON. For 300 miles?

Mr. ANGELL. For 350 miles. Of course, this includes the other dams that have been built and the dredging that has already taken place. This will complete the project, so there will be water transportation provided for 350 miles from Astoria at the mouth of the Columbia to the mouth of the Snake River.

Mr. THORKELSON. Does the gentleman believe the cost of this project justifies the navigation that may be had upon that river?

Mr. ANGELL. I consider it will.

Mr. THORKELSON. Does the gentleman think it will pay for itself.

Mr. ANGELL. In the long run I think it will pay for itself.

Mr. THORKELSON. Without any power development?

Mr. ANGELL. Without any power development.

I call your attention to the fact that this is only an authorization. It is also a 3-year project. This money will first have to be authorized by the Congress, and this will be done piecemeal.

It will take at least 3 years to complete this project under this authorization of $23,700,000, and none of it will be included in this year's Budget. It is a matter which has to be taken up under some future appropriation bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I just want to read one question and the answer of Colonel Robins so everybody will understand:

In other words, Colonel Robins, we are faced in this committee with this proposition: The engineers think this is a good plan, that it will pay out if we can sell the power, but the Board of Army Engineers does not say that there is any market for power at the present time. Is not that the situation in a nutshell?

Colonel ROBINS. Yes, sir; that is it.

Mr. ANGELL. In answer to the gentleman's statement I read from page 8 of the hearings where Colonel Robins says this:

But the indirect benefits from those savings in transportation costs are very great.

He was referring just to the Umatilla Dam.

You cannot state it in dollars and cents, but it means everything to the development of that whole country, to get this navigation now without waiting until you can sell all the power. It is a question of whether Congress in its wisdom would authorize this development to get navigation going without waiting for the development of the power, which would absolutely make the project pay out.

That is Colonel Robins' answer. Colonel Robins said further on page 10 of the report:

Colonel ROBINS. This should be the next step in that program, unquestionably, building the Umatilla Dam. Umatilla is the key to the situation. You cannot get up in the Snake River by open-river methods. The Umatilla Rapids themselves are the biggest obstacle, and then above that there are the Homly Rapids, and it is impossible to improve those rapids by open-river methods at any reasonable cost, and the Umatilla Dam is absolutely essential to any navigation, any through navigation in the Snake River, and it should be the next dam constructed on the Columbia, unquestionably.

Mr. GREEN. If this is constructed, how far will that take navigation up the river?

Colonel ROBINS. It will take it up to Pasco, the mouth of the Snake River.

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure if all Members were acquainted with the Columbia River there would be little or no objection on the part of the House to this proposal. The Columbia River is perhaps the most unique river in the United States. In volume of water it is the second largest river in the United States. It is the only river on this continent which traverses two ranges of mountains. This river rises in the highlands of Canada, comes down through eastern Washington and Oregon, pierces the great Cascade range, then goes 100 miles farther west, pierces the coast range, and empties into the ocean. The Columbia River is the largest lumber port in the world, the second largest wool port in the United States, and the third largest wheat port in the United States. The Columbia is a very important river. All the products that are shipped out of that river in such great quantities are grown in the vicinity of the river. The wheat and the wool come from eastern Oregon and eastern Washington, where Umatilla Dam will be built.

I have never heard of this being a power project, and no one in Oregon considers it a power project. It is a navigation project exclusively. The purpose of it is to make the great Columbia River navigable for some 300 or 400 miles from its mouth. Already through the building of the Bonneville Dam we bring ocean-going vessels more than 150 miles from the ocean through two ranges of mountains, and there in eastern Oregon they actually load wool and wheat on these vessels. If the Umatilla Dam is built so the river will be navigable for some 350 miles from the ocean, that will bring our ocean-going vessels, or barges, at least, right into the heart of the wheat country and the wool country.

I believe this is one of the most meritorious river projects that has ever been brought before the House. The purpose of it is navigation, and not power. I can see little reason for any objection to this proposal, and I hope the amendment offered to strike out the Umatilla Dam provision will not prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I fully realize that those of you who have not a project within your districts are eager to have this bill disposed of, but some of these items are of great concern to the respective districts of many of us.

The last several speakers have been emphasizing the fact that there is no power development in connection with the project now under discussion—in connection with the pending amendment. I wish to take this opportunity to point out that in connection with the Connecticut River project, to which we of Connecticut are unanimously opposed—or, at least, no one in the Connecticut delegation has spoken for it—there is no question as to whether or not power is involved.

To prove that, I submit from the testimony before the committee the questions asked by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] and the answers of Colonel Wheeler, of the Army engineers:

Mr. DONDERO. It has been the policy, Colonel, in these projects, that, as far as power is concerned, it has been an incident to the project of navigation, has it not?

Colonel WHEELER. Well, it is a coordinate use in this plan that is before Congress now.

Mr. DONDERO. Now, this project rather reverses that? Power becomes the major factor and navigation the minor or incidental factor?

Colonel WHEELER. That is correct, in the relationship of 6 to 3.8.

So there can be no argument about power being involved in the Connecticut River project.

In that same connection I believe the Members of the House would be interested to know that the Hartford Electric Light Co., which furnishes a good deal of electricity in that area, last year added 40,000 kilowatts to its capacity. The 40,000 kilowatts were added at a cost of $80 per kilowatt, while in this project, again accepting the testimony of the Army engineers, the electricity to be developed, namely, 29,500 kilowatts, is to cost the taxpayers of the United States $262 a kilowatt.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. If the project on the Connecticut River is completed it will displace the use of 50,000 tons of bituminous coal?

Mr. MILLER. It will.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have been intending to go along with Connecticut on this amendment, but some of the gentlemen from Connecticut are going to make too strong a case for the fear that some day there might be a little power generated on some river. I believe it would be wise for the gentlemen from Connecticut to leave off speaking on their amendment until other amendments are disposed of, to be frank about it.

Mr. MILLER. May I say to the majority leader that power is not the major factor. What I was emphasizing was the testimony in the hearings that the economic justification of the project necessitated the ownership and operation of a power plant. That is certainly not the major concern of the people of Connecticut, with only 29,000 kilowatts, not enough to provide electricty for the smallest town on the Connecticut River. What disturbs us is that this project as well as the dikes now being built in Hartford and East Hartford will increase flood crests. What we want is flood protection.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 79, noes 58.

Mr. ANGELL and Mr. MOTT demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DONDERO and Mr. ANGELL.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 100, noes 78.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, we have some committee amendments, two of which are to this section, and I would suggest that we be permitted to offer them next.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: On page 6, between lines 13 and 14, insert the following paragraph:

"Buffalo Bayou and its tributaries, Texas: The project set forth in House Document No. 456, Seventy-fifth Congress, and authorized by Public, No. 685, Seventy-fifth Congress, is hereby modified in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of Public, No. 761, Seventy-fifth Congress, and all requirements of local cooperation inconsistent with said section 2 are hereby eliminated."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is suggested by the Chief of Engineers for clarifying and modifying a provision in a former river and harbor act to make it comply with provisions since that time adopted in the flood-control bill.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: On page 2, between lines 13 and 14, insert the following item:

"Connecticut River above Hartford, Conn.; House Document No. 165, Seventy-sixth Congress;".

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this is the committee amendment with respect to the Connecticut River which, as you all understand, is controversial and contested, especially by gentlemen from New England. I was not present at the main hearings—I was in the hospital at the time—but when the committee first took the matter up I was present. The hearing was partially completed on that occasion and then postponed to a later date. While I was not present the committee completed the hearing and rejected the project by a close vote, as I understand it, the vote being 9 to 8, or something like that. Afterward a rehearing was granted, and on that occasion the committee adopted it as a committee amendment by a majority vote of the committee, some members of the committee still protesting against it.

This is now offered as a committee amendment, and as chairman of the committee I am carrying out the instructions imposed upon me by the committee.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. I wonder if the gentleman would explain to the House how much the amendment involves and how much of it is for power and what amount, if any, is for navigation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The total cost will be $12,344,000. Approximately one-half of it, as I understand from a member of the Board of Engineers whom I heard, is for navigation and about one-half for power. It is for the construction of a dam at Enfield, with a view to carrying navigation from Hartford to Holyoke, Mass. The member of the Board of Engineers testified that from the standpoint of navigation alone it was not justified, but by a combination of navigation and power together, in the manner in which it was reported, it was justified and would be a paying proposition.

Mr. CARTER and Mr. MOTT rose.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. Is it not a fact that the engineers, on several prior occasions when power was not taken into consideration, had reported adversely on this very project?

Mr. MANSFIELD. A project was adopted in the River and Harbor Act of 1930 which authorized the construction of a channel 12 feet deep between Hartford and Holyoke, subject to certain conditions. Local interests have not complied with those conditions and no work has been done under this authorization.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. It was stated several times on the floor this morning by Members from the New England States that the people in that part of the country do not want that project. If that is true, is there any reason why any one should vote for it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman will have to answer that question for himself.

Mr. MOTT. In the gentleman's opinion, I mean.

Mr. MANSFIELD. So far as I know, every witness that appeared before the committee from Connecticut opposed it. Some of those from Massachusetts favored it, especially from Holyoke, Springfield, and Chicopee. They are on the river above Hartford. We have now a navigation project of 15 feet depth up to Hartford, and this is to carry it up to Holyoke, 30 miles farther, at a depth of 12 feet.

Mr. MOTT. In the gentleman's opinion as chairman of the committee, would it be a correct statement to say that most of the people in the vicinity of this river do not want this project?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It would be hard for me to answer that question. The gentleman might ask the gentlemen from Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that nobody up there wanted it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Of course the gentleman from Oregon wants to be fair. Navigation is already provided to Hartford.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Therefore, it does not seem to me that to reach as far as Hartford, the people should be considered. I agree with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] that the people from Hartford to the Massachusetts line seem to be opposed to it. We are speaking in behalf of the Massachusetts people and they are practically solid for this project. That is where the navigation is actually going to be provided. Further, if I may be allowed in the gentleman's time, I refer to the statement made by the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER]. This project has not been before Congress before as a combined project of power and navigation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It has been up only for navigation heretofore.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not a fact that there are six towns, two of them rather substantial, between Hartford and the Massachusetts line that do not have navigation at this time and apparently from the information sent down do not want it. They came from Windsor Locks and from Enfield, both substantial towns, on the river, and they have no navigation at those points.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I assume the gentleman is correct, though I do not know definitely.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not a fact that this dam will be located in the State of Connecticut?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. I do not know whether the chairman was present or not at the time, but the statement was made by Dr. McNamara, representing the Public Utilities Commission of Connecticut, that the Commission has over 200,000 kilowatt-hours of electrical energy on hand for which there is no market.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, this project is a project which the Army engineers have been concerned with for many years. More than $370,000 has been expended by the Army engineers in surveying for this project. At the present time there is a law on the statute books, passed in 1930 under the river and harbor act, which provides for the carrying out of this project. This amendment in effect makes two changes. The present law provides for the construction of two dams, the first one and a half miles above Hartford, in Connecticut, which will be solely for navigation, and the second at Enfield Rapids, close to the Massachusetts-Connecticut State line, which will be for a combined navigation and power purpose. Under the present law the Government would build the dam above Hartford. It is left under the present law for the State of Connecticut, its municipalities or other subdivisions or for private capital, to build a combined power and navigation dam at Enfield Rapids. Since the time that law was passed, a public utility in the State of Connecticut held a franchise for the building of that dam, and after holding it and blocking construction of the dam for about 2 years its license was terminated because it did nothing and at that time the present depression was under way in 1931. This project has no hidden money in it. When it is completed, at a cost of $12,410,900 to the Federal Government, that is the end of the expense to the Government. In addition there will be an expense of $300,000 by the cities of Chicopee, Holyoke, and Springfield for terminals, and $383,600 by railroads to fix their bridges.

This project at Enfield Rapids calls for the installation of power generators to the capacity of 29,500 kilowatts. They will produce about 170,000,000 kilowatt-hours per year. As has been testified, that is a mere drop in the bucket so far as power is concerned in that area. This dam could not be started before 1940. It would not be completed before 1943 and by that time the full amount of the power generated at that dam would be needed in that area.

It has been testified that power can be carried within an area of 100 miles to great advantage. Within 100 miles of this dam is the most valuable consuming territory in the world. Within 100 miles of this dam is the whole State of Connecticut, the whole State of Rhode Island, practically all of Massachusetts, parts of New Hampshire and Vermont, and a large share of the State of New York. It includes the cities of New York, Boston, Albany, Schenectady, Troy, Springfield, Hartford, Worcester, Bridgeport, Pawtucket, New Bedford, and Cambridge—practically every large city in New England, and most of those in New York State.

Now, with this great consuming population within 100 miles of the particular dam, for any person to argue that there will not be a market for this power when the dam is completed is absolutely absurd. I think that the Army engineers, by their recommendation, the Federal Power Commission, by their recommendation, and by their statements, have shown beyond peradventure that this project is a good project.

As far as power is concerned, it is needed in those communities. The total sales price for the power at this dam will be only $600,000 a year. At the present time the city of Springfield, in which I live, sells for $275,000 a year to the Turners Falls Power Co. the power generated at its city waterworks. The city of Springfield is smaller than the city of Hartford. Nevertheless, we find that the city waterworks will generate about half the power that this dam at Enfield will produce.

When it comes to the question of opposition from a large part of Connecticut and some parts of Massachusetts, it is based upon flood control. One woman came down, as has been stated on the floor, with a petition of 600 names, stating that they were afraid on the flood-control issue; but the Army engineers in a letter of April 13, which is in the printed report, said that the Hartford and Enfield dams will be constructed with suitable and sufficient gates to pass the flood waters without an appreciable increase in the maximum flood heights. One of the witnesses who was opposed to the project stated to the committee that in view of that statement of the Army engineers he had no objection on the question of the effect on floods.

Those people who came down from Connecticut complained about a 15-inch increase in flood heights between Hartford and the State line at Massachusetts. If that is due to anything it is due to the big dikes now under construction at Hartford, and it was so testified by the engineers in connection with this project. Every bit of the increase in flood waters can be laid to those dikes at Hartford.

This opposition from Connecticut is very peculiar. General Wadhams comes down representing the Governor of Connecticut, and he tells the committee that they are very anxious to have all the money to be expended in the Connecticut Valley spent on flood-control reservoirs and dams. None of those dams will be in Connecticut. Some of them will be in Massachusetts, two of them very near the city of Springfield. At Knightsville, on the Westfield River, the Federal Power Commission is calling for a dam at which power may be generated. In other words, Connecticut is very well satisfied to have a project with a dam connected with power if it is not in the State of Connecticut, and will be of benefit to Hartford; but a dam that has power connected with it in the State of Connecticut that will be helpful to Springfield, Chicopee, and Holyoke, they will not stand for it. They are unanimous on that proposition. That is a ridiculous position to take. When we come to navigation, it has been stated that not more than 5 percent of the traffic on the Connecticut River at Hartford is water-borne; but if we turn to the report of the Army engineers, Document No. 35, back in 1930, it shows that the total amount of tonnage in the city of Hartford, both rail and water, everything that comes in, was 1,725,000 net tons, of which 475,000 tons, or about 27½ percent, is water-borne.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLASON. Not until I have finished.

Since 1930 more than 400,000 additional tons are coming by water up to Hartford. Back in 1930, before they had this big increase, and the increase has been 65 percent in the last 7 years on the river up to Hartford on water-borne tonnage, they already had 27½ percent water-borne. Now you turn to Springfield, Chicopee, and Holyoke, and we do not get any of this water-borne traffic. Every bit of tonnage of this type, oil, coal, paper, and other heavy, bulky materials, is shipped to some New England port, New London, Providence, or Hartford; then it is taken over the road by truck or it is brought by pipe line from Providence, if it is oil. What is the result? Here we have a large industrial and munitions center in western Massachusetts in competition with exactly similar types of industry in Connecticut. Our industries in Massachusetts have to pay exactly the same rate that the Hartford people do as far as Hartford and we have to pay the additional cost of transshipment from Hartford or elsewhere into Springfield, Chicopee, or Holyoke. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLASON. I believe I have taken care of the navigation issue, the flood-control issue, and the power issue. We come to another issue which is not evaluated in dollars and cents—the recreation issue. This is the largest river in New England. At the present time Northampton, Holyoke, Chicopee, Springfield, and Hartford are doing away with their sewerage systems so that the river will again be a means of large recreational facilities. It means a whole lot to the city of Springfield to have in front of the city a river 100 feet wide, with a channel of 12 feet, rather than the present river, which has sandbanks across it to such an extent that nothing can navigate it except motorboats.

When it comes to Hartford, the opposition to this project is power. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] hit the nail on the head; it is power. So far as the testimony in the hearings is concerned, every utility company in western Massachusetts has indicated that it has no objection to this dam or to the power which may be generated at the dam. They say it is a mere drop in the bucket and amounts to nothing. It is significant that Hartford is at one end of this 32-mile project and Holyoke at the other. By the Federal Power Commission's own figures, it appears that there are 21 cities in Connecticut and Massachusetts with over 50,000 population. The small consumers represent at least 50 percent of the customers. For the same amount of electricity the people of Holyoke pay $1 a month, while the people of Hartford pay $1.75 a month. If the Hartford Electric Light Co. opposes this project—and I do not know that they do—but if they wanted to give their consumers the same rate Holyoke does it would take up all of this surplus electricity—and it will not be on the market for 3 years. The electric utility in Hartford is privately owned, whereas that in Holyoke is a city department, but they pay practically the same percentage of their income in the way of taxes and cash contributions to the taxing authorities.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLASON. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. On the question of whether there is too much electrical energy, is it not a fact that the utility at Hartford has just added about 48,000 kilowatts of capacity to their plant?

Mr. CLASON. They added 40,000 kilowatts last year; 1939 is starting out as the greatest year in electrical power history. The Hartford Electric Light Co. added 40,000 kilowatts to their steam plant last year, which is greater than the entire output of this dam.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that this 5-minute period will complete my presentation of this important problem. In previous times I have pointed out that the Governor of the State of Connecticut was opposed to this proposition. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in his usual fair and generous way, stated that extensive hearings were held, but the committee rejected the project. On last Monday the committee reopened hearings and three witnesses appeared before the committee against the project, one witness appeared for the project, and one was more or less noncommital, although I believe in favor of the project. After that testimony, in an executive session lasting about 5 minutes, the committee reversed itself and the item is now before us as a committee amendment. I do not want to repeat any of the things I have said before. I have tried to point out that we had plenty of towns between Hartford and Holyoke that do not have navigation that are opposed to this project. I do want, however, to answer some of the questions raised in the statement of my friend and colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON] and refer to his statement as to the great tonnage on the Connecticut River.

I stated this morning that, outside of petroleum, not 5 percent of the freight incoming and outgoing from Hartford came up and down this river. I refer to page 17 of the report. I read:

> In the last 7 years the total tonnage below Hartford increased about 426,000 tons, or 65 percent. This is due mainly to the enormous increase of 513,000 tons, or 148 percent, in petroleum products. On the other hand, bituminous-coal traffic has decreased about 82,000 tons, or 37 percent. Steamboat freight ceased after 1931, when the regular line to New York was discontinued. The increase under miscellaneous during the last 2 years it attributable to the large shipments of scrap iron which was placed in that class. In the last 11 years the miscellaneous tonnage of water-borne traffic other than coal and petroleum products below Hartford has averaged less than 10 percent of the total.

I refer you also to page 27 of this report of the Army engineers on this project on the question of its effect on flood control—and that is what we are concerned with. It is true that the Army engineers who are now spending money that has been appropriated by Congress to build dikes at Hartford and East Hartford state that these dikes would cause a slight increase in flood crest north of that point, but I read the following from their report:

> The discharge over Enfield Dam would not be reduced by submergence, even at maximum flood stages, as the depth of submergence is not sufficient to affect free overfall. Flood heights in the Enfield pool are governed now by the existing Enfield Dam. With the proposed Enfield Dam a slightly greater surcharge over the spillway crest than at the existing dam would be needed to pass some flood discharge, owing to the shorter spillway length of the proposed dam. Added to this increment would be the backwater effect of the proposed dam located downstream from the existing dam. The summated effect of these two factors is to increase maximum flood heights 0.7 foot at Springfield, 0.4 foot at Chicopee, and 0.3 foot at lower Holyoke.

That refers to the Enfield Dam. The figures are not given in the report covering the increase of the dam a mile and a half north of Hartford.

Mr. Chairman, I have in my possession a petition, previously referred to, signed by 673 residents of the Connecticut River Valley; another petition from West Springfield, Mass., signed by 255 residents of West Springfield, Mass., and Agawam, Mass.; and I have a letter, previously referred to, from a farmers' cooperative doing business with more than 50,000 farmers. I also have a sheaf of 18 telegrams from labor organizations, including three of the Big Four brotherhoods. I also have a letter from the Holyoke Taxpayers' Association, signed by the president of that association, Mr. Fowler. He states that his taxpayers represent more than 49 percent of the assessed valuation of the property in Holyoke and are opposed to this project. Holyoke is at the head of navigation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to state my reasons for opposing the pending amendment. We have heard, and will hear in the arguments on this amendment, the usual pro-utility and anti-utility arguments. I do not credit a good many of them, such as the arguments that are put forward that there is no need for power in that area. It is a very heavily industrialized area and the need for power is steadily expanding. The amount of power generated by the dam would, as has been stated, be very small. The utilities, whether they have made any drive for it or not, would undoubtedly oppose Federal power in the area.

The railroads, the railroad brotherhoods, and the unions oppose navigation because they think it might compete with the railroad and hurt the railroad, which is now in receivership. But those are not the major considerations at this time.

In that valley we have been plagued by serious floods during the last 12 years. In that time we have had three major floods that have done many millions of dollars of damage. We have voted for flood-control projects, a dam farther up the river, and on the tributaries.

During the last week we added to the House bill several projects besides those the committee brought in to try to bring forward flood control of that river. There is no question but that these two dams provided in the pending amendment would raise the flood crest at Hartford. The amount of the rise is in dispute, but it would be raised. I have been requested by the water commission to state its opposition to going ahead with this project at least until the flood-control works above are completed.

We are, on the one hand, appropriating money to try to take care of floods and on the other hand we bring in a project to be started at the same time, which would offset these flood-control works. If these dams were completed before all the works which we now have contemplated and appropriated for are completed, we would be worse off than we are at the present time, as far as floods are concerned.

I think that is the major consideration. I do not think we can justify with our people voting for a project which would be, in the face of the history of those floods and the damage done by them, a project which would deliberately raise the flood crest at those towns along the river. For these reasons I ask that the amendment be defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, a number of times during the debate on the river and harbor bill, which embodies the Connecticut River amendment, it was mentioned that a lot of false propaganda concerning this measure had been placed in the hands of the Members of the House of Representatives. It was charged that this propaganda was disseminated by those who finance the railroad industry of our country.

As many of you know, I am a railroad man. I was an employee of a railroad from the time I started to work until I was elected to this House. I know little about the financing of the railroads, but I know the practical problems of the railroads and I know the problems of the railroad employees, the men who run the railroads.

I wish to state that I received no propaganda concerning this legislation from any Wall Street financiers. I did, however, receive some propaganda from two of my colleagues. I refer to letters I received from the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

In his letter the gentleman from Mississippi stated:

> It was also brought out before the committee that no railroad men had ever lost their jobs because of rivers and harbors development.

The gentleman from Mississippi continues:

> Certain railroad financiers are opposed to this kind of improvement because it sometimes compels them to improve traffic, give consideration to local interests, and provide reasonable transportation rates to the people to be served.

I do not speak for the moneyed interests who control the railroads of this country. I speak for the railroaders, 27,000 of them back in my congressional district, and for all the other people who depend indirectly on the railroads. I, too, speak for 10,000 soft-coal miners and their dependents. I would be false to the trust reposed in me by those good people who elected me to Congress if I allowed the statements of the gentleman from Mississippi to pass unchallenged.

In speaking for both of these groups, may I say we are opposed to the Government subsidizing waterway projects, hydroelectric power projects, coastwise shipping, river transport, busses, trucks, pipe lines, power lines, and airplanes, or any unregulated transportation facilities which compete with the railroads. I am opposed to these subsidized competitors for the simple reason that they are taking the bread and butter from the mouths of my people.

Let me tell you some of the reasons why we are opposed to these Government subsidies of chiefly unregulated competitors of the railroads. Let me cite some of the things which contribute to our unemployment problem. Let me tell you some of the factors which contribute to our national debt of more than $40,000,000,000. Let me tell you why our national economy grows more cockeyed every day with these unwise and short-sighted policies prevailing today.

The coal industry of this country represents an investment of $3,000,000,000. It is essential to the welfare of the Nation in both peace and war. It is a basic national industry and of equal rank in point of necessity with our food supply. The coal industry and the railroad industry are natural allies. Each is essential to the other. What affects one affects the other.

The coal industry is the largest employer of labor in the United States today, despite the tremendous drop due to the competition of subsidized industries. In 1923, the coal industry employed 704,793 men. Today, it only employs 484,000 men. That is where a part of our army of unemployed was recruited.

The coal industry pays the highest wages of any industry in the United States, 87 cents per hour. The railroads pay the next highest wages, 68 cents per hour. Twenty percent of all the revenue freight carried by the railroads is represented by coal. During the last 10 years, the coal industry has lost $400,000,000 in revenue, by reason of competition from other fuels and generators of power. In 1929, the railroads received $827,798,969 in revenue for hauling bituminous coal. In 1937, the last full year on which figures are available, the railroads received $634,292,743 in revenue for hauling bituminous coal. That represents a net loss of $193,506,226 in railroad revenues, when you compare the revenues of those 2 years.

Any man who is in business or who has any familiarity with business knows what happens when his revenues are cut by one-quarter and yet his overhead continues at virtually the same figure. That is a partial answer to the plight of the railroads. Coal represents 20 percent of the revenue freight handled by the American railroads and it is the most profitable freight for the railroads.

In my district alone, coal represents an investment of $27,000,000. As I said a moment ago, 10,000 men depend upon the coal industry in my district and some 27,000 men depend on the railroads. When the coal industry is not working, as witnessed in the recent deadlock between the miners and operators, the railroaders do not work. That sort of thing was an economic tragedy in my district.

Let me give you some idea of the significance of that to my district. Take, for instance, the city of Du Bois, with a population of about 12,000. When the rail shops of that community, which is an important railroad division point, are forced to close down the whole community closes down because about 75 percent of the population depends on the railroad pay roll.

This unfortunate situation is even more pronounced in my home city of Altoona, where something like 90 percent of the population of nearly 90,000 is dependent on the railroad pay roll. In 1926 the railroad pay roll in Altoona was $2,207,372 a month, but today, as a result of all manner of unregulated and competing methods of transportation, as well as the slump in the coal industry, that pay roll has shrunk to $1,369,000 a month.

Another little city in my district, the city of Tyrone, an important railroad junction point, with a population of 9,000, has a monthly railroad pay roll of about $50,000, and about 50 percent of the population is dependent upon that pay roll.

Gentlemen, those of you who never lived in a railroad town have no conception of the distress and suffering that comes in the wake of an economic disturbance of any kind which affects the principal industry.

Now, I will give you the specific answer to why I am opposed to this proposal to appropriate $13,000,000 for this Connecticut River project. That power project would displace 50,000 tons of coal annually. It requires 1,000 railroad cars, or 100 coal trains, to haul that amount of coal. That means work for 5,000 railroaders and miners. Can you blame me for standing here today opposing this project which would result in more miners and more railroaders being thrown out of work? And when I say thrown out of work, I do not mean temporarily. I mean the jobs of those 5,000 men would be gone forever, gone the same way that thousands and thousands of other miners and railroaders' jobs have gone.

That is the starting point of a vicious circle of cockeyed economics, which are destroying jobs, destroying purchasing power, and destroying the morale of the American people. That is a part of the unjustifiable and uneconomic policies which are creating nothing but more and more need for relief and the need for more and more millions to pay for it. That sort of thing has to stop somewhere some time, and we might just as well start right now with this Connecticut River project. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VOORHIS of California) there were—ayes 36, noes 98.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: On page 5, strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to strike out the Tombigbee project. In the bill the initial authorization calls for $12,500,000. The total project, with State contribution, amounts to about $73,000,000, and the Federal part of it is about $67,000,000.

As described to you by the gentleman from Mississippi, this project proposes to connect the Tennessee River with the Tombigbee River. Considerable study has been made of this project, and, as the gentleman from Mississippi has already said, there is no power in this bill; but the report that was filed by the engineers with the committee is not a very enthusiastic report and includes three items of a rather speculative nature. If these three items are deleted from the bill, this project is not economically justified.

In addition, I wish to make it known that this country has now expended about $400,000 on another survey to determine whether or not it is feasible or more economical to build a waterway to connect the Tennessee River with the Tombigbee River by way of the Warrior River in the State of Alabama instead of this proposal. I believe that just recently the chairman of our committee received a telegram from the Governor of Alabama asking that this matter be deferred until a full report has been filed and consideration given to whether or not the Warrior course is more feasible, more economical, and a better waterway than the proposal before the committee this afternoon, namely, the Tombigbee.

The three items which are rather speculative, and which, if deleted, would make the project economically unjustified, are these. In the report is a credit for $600,000 annually for national defense. I do not argue, and I do not mean to impose upon the time of the Committee to say that in time of war this project would or would not have that value. One Federal board thought that was a very speculative item. The next item is a $275,000 credit for increase in land values. The third item of $100,000 is credited to recreational purposes. These three total $975,000. The saving estimate is approximately $4,000,000. The maintenance and operation cost annually is $3,500,000. If you deduct from the savings as estimated by the engineers the $975,000 intangible benefits, the project does not come before you economically justified.

That it has some merit I believe will be conceded by everyone, but I think from a standpoint of policy and in the face of the economic condition of our country, it would be far better and wiser if this matter were delayed until such time as we could see daylight in our national finances.

That is all I care to say about it, Mr. Chairman, at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as you all know, I am somewhat departing from my usual custom since I have been Speaker of the House of Representatives, because I have always had some doubt as to the wisdom and propriety of the presiding officer taking too liberal a part in the deliberations on the floor in the Committee of the Whole; but the matter involved here is one of considerable interest, of very great interest, indeed, not only to my congressional district, but also, as I conceive it, to the States of Mississippi and Alabama and that whole area which is involved in this program. I therefore rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan to strike this item out of the committee bill.

I would not be justified, I think, in undertaking to offer or to support this proposal as an amendment to a bill when it had not been included in the bill reported by the House committee, but the case here presented is this: The Government of the United States has spent quite a large sum of money in a very exhaustive and complete survey of every feature of this project from the standpoint of the development of commerce, of flood control, and of opening up another great artery of commerce between the whole Tennessee River Valley system and the great port of Mobile and the Gulf of Mexico, and after the most full and elaborate and detailed investigation—and you know that the Board of Engineers of the United States Army is ordinarily a very hard-boiled body in making recommendations for a doubtful project—the engineers have recommended the inclusion of this project in this bill. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, presided over by our beloved friend, Judge MANSFIELD, of Texas, after full consideration of the project has given it the approval of the committee. So it comes here in the ordinary form, after full and complete investigation, favorably recommended by a conservative, and, I think, very prudent committee of the House of Representatives, and my friend seeks to eliminate it from the bill.

The gentleman from Michigan undertook to infer that the report of the Board of Engineers was not very enthusiastic, but I want to say that I drew the impression from the remarks of the gentleman, especially his concluding remarks, that he was not very enthusiastic for his amendment to eliminate this item from the bill.

I will not have time to make any argument about the facts involved here. I will candidly admit there is some element of local embarrassment in my State about this whole situation, for the reasons that have been stated by the gentleman from Michigan. I do not know what the report of the Board of Engineers will be on an alternate route down there that is now being investigated by the Board, but here is a recommendation after a full and complete survey of this whole situation by the Board of Engineers that this is a feasible program, that it is a self-justifying program, and that it is a proposition for the ultimate development of a great and important artery of commerce in that whole section of the country. It is a project heartily endorsed by a great majority of the counties in my district. It is true that on the recommendations of the Board of Engineers in the long run it will cost a considerable sum of money, and we are all, of course, in these days of large public expenditures and in view of the amount of our present national debt, somewhat anxious and solicitous about authorizing additional appropriations.

Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I will not yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania at present. I might not be able to tell him "where we are going to get the money."

Mr. RICH. That is the question I would like to ask.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

This is a program that will be extended over quite a number of years by the nature of the construction difficulties, and on the whole case, my friends, I feel justified in making an exception to my usual practice and ask you to follow your committee recommendations in this instance and retain this authorization in the bill and to defeat the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one question I would like the Speaker to answer in regard to this proposal, as well as any other proposal that might come before this Congress and that question has not been answered, and does not seem to be able to be answered by any Member of the Congress, and that is, Where are we going to get the money? [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GILCHRIST and Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 97, noes 75.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DONDERO and Mr. RANKIN.

The Committee again divided; and there were—ayes 112, noes 87.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: Page 9, after line 6, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The sum of not to exceed $120,000 of appropriations available for river and harbor work shall be immediately available as an emergency fund to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for repairing damage to and checking erosion on the Bayocean Peninsula in Oregon, caused by storm in January 1939, in order to provide adequate protection to property on such peninsula and in Tillamook, Oreg."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is an appropriation on a legislative bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon desire to be heard on the point of order made by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York did not hear the amendment correctly, because it is not an appropriation but an authorization for the engineers to use river and harbor money.

Mr. Chairman, there is no language in this amendment which is appropriating language. The amendment authorizes the use by the Army engineers of money available for river and harbor work to be used in emergency work on this project.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I think I shall have to insist on the point of order. If we are to have an appropriation, it should come in an appropriation bill after a hearing, and then it would go through quicker, if the need were shown, than this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon contains language which proposes to divert an appropriation heretofore made to a new purpose and is therefore in violation of clause 4 of rule XXI of the House of Representatives. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOTT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: Page 9, after line 6, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $120,000, to be immediately available as an emergency fund to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for repairing damage to and checking erosion on the Bayocean Peninsula in Oregon caused by a storm in January 1939, in order to provide adequate protection to property on such peninsula and in Tillamook, Oreg."

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I realize, of course, that the House today appears to be in no mood to accept amendments, but this little amendment I have offered is of such vital importance to many people in my State that I have decided to risk offering it, and I trust you will pay attention while I briefly explain it.

I have consulted the chairman of the committee and the ranking Republican member of the committee, and I have also consulted the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], who has been offering these motions to strike. So far as I know, no one on the committee has any objection to this amendment, and the chairman and the ranking member have given me permission to state that they have no objection.

Now, this is the situation. Last year a very disastrous storm broke out along the entire Oregon and southern Washington coast and the center of its fury was in the Tillamook Bay area. The ocean broke over the Tillamook Peninsula, which is called Bayocean, at four places. It almost destroyed the peninsula and destroyed a great deal of property. So great was the damage, and so important it was in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers that it be corrected, that they have ordered a detailed survey.

That survey will not be completed until next March. In the meantime and in order to prevent another disaster it is necessary, before the next winter storms come, to do some emergency work which will cost $120,000, according to the engineers, and that is the purpose of this amendment.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has received a report from the Board of Army Engineers on a separate bill which I introduced for this purpose. The letter was written on May 11, which was the day this bill was reported. Otherwise I am confident I would have been successful in including that bill in this pending river and harbor authorization bill.

After describing the storm and the damage, stating the fact that it will require 1 year to make the survey, this is what the engineers say about it:

The residents of Tillamook Bay area are firmly convinced that the rapid erosion in recent years of the Bayocean Spit is due to the construction by this department of the North Jetty at Tillamook Bay. Further study, however, will be necessary to verify such a conclusion.

The appropriation to be authorized by the bill is believed to be sufficient to provide the emergency protection contemplated, and this department is prepared to undertake the work when funds are made available for the purpose.

That, my colleagues, is the whole story. Unless this emergency work is done it is the belief of the people out in that region that the next storm will not only destroy all the property on this peninsula but will entirely destroy the peninsula itself and, further, will probably do great damage to Tillamook Bay. It amounts to only $120,000, and I sincerely hope the committee may approve this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOTT) there were ayes 61 and noes 30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Sacramento River flood control, California: The item for this project in the River and Harbor Act of August 26, 1937, is hereby amended by adding thereto a proviso reading as follows: "Provided, That there is also hereby authorized an additional contribution by the Federal Government of not to exceed $1,600,000 for completion of the project previously adopted."

SEC. 3. The second proviso in section 2 of the act of August 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 844, 850), authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That the entire Central Valley project, California, heretofore authorized and established under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 115) and the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (49 Stat. 1622), is hereby reauthorized and declared to be for the purpose of improving navigation, regulating the flow of the San Joaquin River and the Sacramento River, controlling floods, providing for storage and for the delivery of the stored waters thereof, for construction under the provisions of the Federal reclamation laws of such distribution systems as the Secretary of the Interior deems necessary in connection with lands for which said stored waters are to be delivered, for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands and lands of Indian reservations, and other beneficial uses, and for the generation and sale of electric energy as a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertakings, and in order to permit the full utilization of the works constructed to accomplish the aforesaid purposes:"

SEC. 4. That the paragraph in section 1 of the River and Harbor Act, approved July 25, 1912, authorizing the removal of temporary obstructions from tributaries of waterways under Federal improvement (37 Stat. L. 722), as amended in section 3 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes", approved July 3, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Chief of Engineers, in his discretion, and after approval by the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized to make preliminary examinations and minor surveys preliminary thereto and to remove snags and other temporary or readily removable obstructions from tributaries of waterways already under Federal improvement or in general use by navigation, to be paid from funds allotted to the adjoining waterways: Provided, That the cost of such work in any single year shall not exceed $3,000 per tributary."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: On page 11, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following as a new section:

"SEC. 5. That (a) the consent, permission, and authority granted to the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, now superseded by the Chicago Park District, a municipal corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois to exercise jurisdiction over the navigable waters of Lake Michigan which lie within the following-described boundaries:

"Beginning at a point at the intersection of the existing bulkhead along Lake Shore Drive in Chicago, Ill., with the existing pier which is parallel to and north of Ohio Street extended and south of Ontario Street extended; thence easterly along said pier to a point in a line parallel to and 350 feet easterly of said bulkhead along the Lake Shore Drive; thence northwesterly along said last-described line to a point in a curve of 200 feet radius and tangent both to said last-described line and to a line 350 feet southerly from the southerly side of and parallel to the shore arm extension breakwater extending into Lake Michigan from a point near the intersection of Oak Street and Lake Shore Drive; thence along said curve to a point in said line last described; thence easterly along said line to a point in a line at right angles with said shore arm extension breakwater at the eastern extremity thereof; thence northward along said last-described line to said shore arm extension breakwater; thence westward along said shore arm extension breakwater to the shore line; and (b) the right granted to said the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, now superseded by the Chicago Park District, to destroy the navigability of the above-described waters altogether, and (c) the right granted to said the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, now superseded by the Chicago Park District, to erect an additional breakwater to connect the said shore arm extension breakwater near the intersection of Oak Street and Lake Shore Drive with the shore line, and (d) the transfer of possession of said shore arm extension breakwater to said the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, now superseded by the Chicago Park District, and the obligation for the permanent care, custody, and maintenance of said shore arm extension breakwater by the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, now superseded by the Chicago Park District, all as provided for by the act entitled 'An act granting to the Commissioners of Lincoln Park the right to erect a breakwater in the navigable waters of Lake Michigan, and transferring jurisdiction over certain navigable waters of Lake Michigan to the Commissioners of Lincoln Park,' approved March 3, 1931, be rescinded.

"The United States of America hereby resumes jurisdiction over the above-described waters and the above described shore arm extension breakwater, and hereby discharges the Chicago Park District, successor to the superseded the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, from its liability for the permanent care, custody, and maintenance of said shore arm extension breakwater.

"Said Chicago Park District shall signify its acceptance of this act by written notice to the Secretary of War within 60 days after the passage of this act, and this act shall become effective immediately upon its acceptance by said Chicago Park District. In the event of nonacceptance within 60 days this act shall become null and void."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this was announced as a committee amendment. That is slightly erroneous, because the matter came up since the committee has had a meeting, but I have consulted several members of the committee on both sides of the aisle, and they offer no objection to it. The facts are that this property was conveyed by the War Department to the city of Chicago in the river and harbor bill of 1930. They no longer have use for it for that purpose, and the object of this amendment is to transfer it back to the War Department. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and I have his letter here which I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 15, 1939.

Hon. JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD,
Chairman, Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: Reference is made to your letter dated April 18, 1939, requesting the views of the Department on the bill (H. R. 5800) entitled "A bill providing for the resumption of jurisdiction over certain navigable waters of Lake Michigan by the United States."

By act of Congress, approved March 3, 1931, the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, Chicago, Ill., upon their acceptance thereof were granted the right to exercise complete jurisdiction over certain navigable waters of Lake Michigan along the Chicago Lake Shore Drive, including the right to destroy the navigability of the described waters and to perform such acts as they might perform if said waters were nonnavigable. Said act also granted to the Commissioners the right to erect a breakwater so as to connect the existent shore arm extension breakwater with the shore line and transferred possession of the said shore-arm extension breakwater to the Commissioners charging them with liability for the care, custody, and proper maintenance thereof. The terms of the aforesaid act were accepted by the Commissioners of Lincoln Park by resolution adopted on April 28, 1931, and on April 10, 1934, the Chicago Park district was created to consolidate the various park districts and became the successor to the rights, duties, and liabilities of the Lincoln Park Commissioners.

Neither the Lincoln Park Commissioners nor the Chicago Park District has exercised the rights and privileges granted under the act approved March 3, 1931, or complied with the conditions in respect to maintenance of the shore arm extension breakwater. It appears that the objective of the Lincoln Park Commissioners in 1931 was to fill in a strip of the lake front along Lake Shore Drive so as to provide an ample roadway for traffic outside certain streetcar tracks then occupying a portion of the drive. However, said tracks have since been removed and the project is now unnecessary and impracticable. It is also understood that the Chicago Park District is unable to devote funds for the improvement and upkeep of the shore-arm breakwater and wishes to be relieved of that responsibility.

The purpose of the instant bill is to rescind the act approved March 3, 1931, and to provide for resumption of jurisdiction by the United States over the waters and shore-arm extension breakwater, and for the discharge of the Chicago Park District from its liability for the permanent care, custody, and maintenance of said shore-arm extension breakwater. It requires acceptance by the said Chicago Park District, to be signified by written notice to the Secretary of War within 60 days after passage, and provides that upon failure of said Chicago Park District to so signify its acceptance the act shall become null and void.

The shore-arm extension breakwater was built by the United States in 1914–17 as part of the project authorized by Congress to provide an anchorage basin and protect the Navy pier. As the maintenance of this breakwater is still necessary for the protection of the harbor, and as it is no longer required or being maintained by the Chicago Park District, the Department recommends favorable consideration of H. R. 5800 by Congress.

This proposed report was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget which advises that there would be no objection to its submission to the committee.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made at the following-named localities, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes; and examinations and surveys heretofore or hereafter authorized shall include all related conservation subjects, such as abatement of pollution, recreation, the development of hydroelectric power and wildlife conservation: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or joint resolution shall be made: Provided further, That after the regular or formal reports made as required by law on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or proposed are submitted no supplemental or additional report or estimate shall be made unless authorized by law: And provided further, That the Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway or harbor mentioned in this act until the project for the proposed work shall have been adopted by law:

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: On page 11, line 6, strike out the figure "5" and insert the figure "6."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, that becomes necessary on account of the amendment we adopted a while ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: At the bottom of page 11, insert the following items:

"Beals Harbor, Maine.

"Blue Hill Harbor, Maine."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, these are additional surveys that have been requested.

Mr. CARTER. We have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: Page 12, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following item: "Hellen's Creek, Calvert County, Md."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: Page 12, line 20, strike out "Middlesex County" and insert in lieu thereof "Nansemond and Isle of Wight Counties."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this item was erroneously stated. They named the wrong counties. This amendment corrects it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: Page 13, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following item:

"Channel from the deep water in St. Josephs Sound to, and turning basis at, Ozona, Fla."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 14, after line 16, insert:

"Missouri River in South Dakota, with a view to improvement to make power available to develop deposits of manganese and other strategic minerals and for pumping and other uses."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I explained this amendment to the chairman of the committee. It calls for a survey. I think there is no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ZIMMERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Were the House to adjourn at this time, would the present bill be the pending business tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. Answering the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Texas, the Chair will state that the previous question having been ordered on the bill and all amendments to final passage, it would be the unfinished and privileged order of business tomorrow morning.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Can these individual amendments then be voted on?

The SPEAKER. A separate vote can be demanded on them when that question is reached.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HARTER of Ohio, for 5 days, on account of urgent official business.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

By Mr. TENEROWICZ:

H. R. 6391. A bill for the relief of Walter Raczak; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3129. By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of 16 members of the Royal Neighbors of Shelby, Ohio, urging amendment to the Social Security Act to exempt fraternal organizations; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3130. By Mr. CHIPERFIELD: Petition of Townsend Club, No. 1, Quincy, Ill., urging immediate action by Congress on House bill 2; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3131. By Mr. ENGEL: Petition of Lewis Wald and Frank Liskovec, president and secretary, respectively, of Townsend Club, No. 1, Thompsonville, Mich., urging enactment of House bill 2, known as the general welfare bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3132. By Mr. FLAHERTY: Petition of the Massachusetts Laundry Owners' Association, favoring certain amendments to the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3133. Also, petition supporting certain amendments to existing Federal income-tax laws; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3134. By Mr. THOMAS F. FORD: Resolution passed by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, endorsing the fullest development of the harbor at Crescent City by the Federal Government, and urging the War Department and the Congress of the United States to take all necessary steps for its early completion; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

3135. By Mr. HARTER of New York: Petition of the Buffalo Post Office Post, No. 412, Veterans of Foreign Wars, favoring Senate bill 1859 and House bill 5147; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

3136. By Mr. IZAC: Petition of sundry constituents of the Twentieth Congressional District of California, favoring the General Welfare Act and requesting its early approval this session of Congress; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3137. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the Federated Garden Clubs of New York State, Inc., New York City, concerning section 2 of the reorganization plan which would transfer from the Biological Survey many conservation measures such as the Pittman-Robertson Act and the migratory-bird provisions to the Department of the Interior; to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

3138. By Mr. MERRITT: Resolution of the board of trustees of the village of Groton, N. Y., requesting that they be included in the flood-control project of the Owasco Lake watershed; to the Committee on Flood Control.

3140. Also, petition of Walter Damrosch, New York City, favoring the passage of Senate bill 1306 and House bill 3840; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

3141. Also, petition of the New York State Department of Health, Albany, N. Y., urging favorable consideration of the Mansfield and Barkley bills (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

3142. By Mr. TENEROWICZ: Resolution of the Common Council of the City of Detroit, Mich., urging that no further reduction be made in Works Progress Administration appropriations, and that serious consideration be given to increasing such appropriations to avoid a complete breakdown of welfare relief; to the Committee on Appropriations.

3143. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Defenders of America, Pittsburgh, Pa., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to House bill 4860, concerning immigration and naturalization; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, May 8, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Dr. Raphael H. Miller, pastor of the National City Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, in whose hand our life is and whose are all our ways; Thou who hast made of one blood all men who dwell upon the face of the earth: Do Thou remind us this day that each of us is the child of Thy love and care. Bring to us the sense of our individual privilege and responsibility, and dignify the words of our mouths and the deeds of our hands with the acknowledgment before Thee of Thy sacred entrustments. Make us to be faithful stewards of Thy manifold bounty, for the earth is Thine and the fullness thereof. Through all the maddening maze of things which perplex do Thou keep within our hearts the token of Thy purpose for us and the haunting hope of Thy coming kingdom of righteousness and peace. Renew within us the noblest aspirations of our faith, and redeem us by the relentlessness of Thy demand upon us. Enlarge us by divine grace, and endue us with that power which is not of ourselves but of Thee. May the sense of Thy nearness transfigure every duty and fill our hearts with the peace of welldoing. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, May 17, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS ACT—BLOOD TRANSFUSIONS, LIFESAVING, FIRE FIGHTING, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1937, as amended, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

SESSION LAWS OF HAWAII, 1939

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate copies of the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Hawaii, House Joint Resolution 12, requesting Congress to ratify and confirm Act 58 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1939, further amending Act 174 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1935, as amended by Act 23 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1937, by extending the time within which revenue bonds may be issued and delivered; and Senate Joint Resolution 23, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to provide the funds specifically designated by various acts of Congress to be appropriated for the more complete endowment and maintenance of the Agricultural Experiment Station of the Territory of Hawaii, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Legislative Resolution 33

Resolution memorializing the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, to cooperate with and assist the Nebraska State Railway Commission in securing reconsideration by the full Interstate Commerce Commission of their decision retaining present freight-rate discriminations against grain growers in western Nebraska

Whereas proof has been presented to the Nebraska Unicameral Legislature that the levels of freight rates on shipments by rail of grain between points in western Nebraska and the home market at Omaha, Nebr., are relatively much higher than the freight rates on grain shipments for equal distances between points in neighboring grain-producing States and their nearest market; and

Whereas a few odious examples of such discrimination are as follows:

	Rate (cents)	Distance (miles)
Kimball, Nebr., to Omaha	27	442
Weskan, Kans., to Kansas City	23	442
Ottman, Nebr., to Omaha	27	382
Modoc, Kans., to Kansas City	22	420
Sidney, Nebr., to Omaha	27	407
Deerfield, Kans., to Kansas City	23	403
Haigler, Nebr., to Omaha	24	356
Brewster, Kans., to Omaha	22	365

And

Whereas the Nebraska State Railway Commission has complained to the Interstate Commerce Commission on two occasions, setting out the facts and demanding relief; and

Whereas such complaints have been supplemented by petitions and letters from farmers' cooperative associations in such territory; and

Whereas relief has been denied in each case by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas the Nebraska State Railway Commission has now made a final plea for an opportunity to be heard in oral argument before the Interstate Commerce Commission, sitting en banc; and

Whereas a conservative estimate of the minimum direct loss to the Nebraska producers in such territory is $200,000 per year; and

Whereas under the provisions of section 201 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make complaint and to cooperate with and assist cooperative associations of farmers making complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to rates, charges, tariffs, and practices relating to the transportation of farm products: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska in fifty-third regular session assembled:

1. That the Nebraska Unicameral Legislature respectfully requests the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, to cooperate with and assist the Nebraska State Railway Commission, acting on behalf of the cooperative associations of farmers, in securing reconsideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission, sitting en banc, of the question presented in the preamble of this resolution and to cooperate and assist in every way possible to bring about a proper and fair adjustment of the freight rates on the shipment of grain from western Nebraska to Omaha, Nebr.

2. That this resolution be spread at large upon the journal of this legislature, and that the clerk of this legislature is hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed to the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States; to the President of the United States; to the Vice President of the United States, as presiding officer of the United States Senate; to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States; to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States; and to each of the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the Congress, to the end that representatives in the Government and in the Congress of the United States will be advised that this legislature considers as imperative the reconsideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission, sitting en banc, of their decision retaining present freight rate discriminations against grain growers in western Nebraska, as set forth in the preamble of this resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Arkansas Osteopathic Association, the South Dakota Osteopathic Association, and the Virginia Society of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, favoring the amendment of Senate bill 1620, the so-called national health bill, so as to preserve the freedom of choice of the physician and school of practice to persons entitled to medical care, and providing osteopathic representation on Federal and State advisory councils, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of members of Alameda Townsend Club, No. 3, of Alameda, Calif., praying for the adoption of the so-called Townsend general-welfare plan to provide old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of New York City and vicinity praying for the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Capper antilynching bill and also praying for an immediate investigation of recent lynchings by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented the petition of Rev. H. C. Attwater, rector, and 92 members of St. John's Church, of Wichita, Kans., praying that Congress take action to save the Nation from being involved in foreign war; to strengthen, rather than weaken, the Neutrality Act; to follow the sound foreign policy laid down by Washington of avoiding foreign entanglements and alliances; to stop loans or credit advances to foreign governments at war; to enact effective legislation to take the profits out of war; to keep American battleships and soldiers out of foreign war zones; to stop all shipments of war supplies to Japan or any other nation engaged in war, and to provide for submission to the States for early ratification the proposed amendment to the Constitution authorizing a referendum on war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by a meeting of the council of the Bar Association of the City of Boston, Mass., favoring the adoption of amendments to the existing Federal income-tax laws so as to provide that where compensation received for services rendered covering a period of 2 years or more from beginning to completion of such services is payable only on completion of such services, it shall be deemed long-term capital gain, taxable the same as gain on the sale or exchange of capital assets held for more than 2 years, or alternatively, that such compensation, while treated as income of the year in which realized, shall not bear an aggregate tax greater than would have been payable thereon if the compensation had been ratably received over the period during which the services were rendered, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH also presented the following resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING CONGRESS RELATIVE TO THE JEWISH NATIONAL HOME IN PALESTINE

Whereas recognition has been given by the nations of the world to the historical connection of the Jewish people with Palestine and to the grounds for reconstituting their national home in that country; and

Whereas the United States of America has given its approval to the reestablishment of the Jewish National Home in Palestine, as embodied in a resolution adopted by the Congress of the United States known as "the Lodge resolution"; and

Whereas the General Court of Massachusetts deplores the persecution of peoples in any land based upon racial bigotry and religious intolerance and has on previous occasions expressed its sympathetic interest in the Jewish national aspirations: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts expresses its concern in the welfare of the Jewish National Home and its admiration of the progress made in Palestine by the efforts of the Jewish pioneers;

That it is inspiring to behold an ancient people return to the land of its origin for the purpose of being able to live its own life, to develop their own culture and civilization, and to mold its national destiny; and

That it views with favor the achievements of the Jewish pioneers in Palestine where opportunities were created for tens of thousands of Jews to return to the land of their fathers as of right and not on sufferance; and be it further

Resolved, That the United States of America be and is respectfully solicited to use its good offices for the purpose of safeguarding the integrity of the Balfour Declaration and the interest of the Jewish National Home, in accordance with the terms of the Palestine mandate, and to the end that the doors of Palestine may be opened for the purpose of admitting the homeless Jewish victims of racial bigotry and religious intolerance, where they may find the opportunity of rebuilding their broken lives; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

RELIEF SITUATION IN MONTANA

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have been requested to have incorporated in the RECORD, if I may have consent to do so, a letter relating to conditions of unemployment, addressed to the Governor, the public welfare administrator, the attorney general, and the secretary of state of Montana by Chairman Basone, of a committee composed of public-spirited persons. I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BILLINGS, MONT., May 5, 1939.

To: Hon. ROY E. AYERS, Governor.
PUBLIC WELFARE ADMINISTRATOR.
ATTORNEY GENERAL.
SECRETARY OF STATE.

GENTLEMEN: A joint committee, representing all organized groups of Billings and Yellowstone County, has for some time discussed the relief situation in this city and county. This committee was selected by representative groups of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, American Federation of Labor, Workers' Alliance of America, Billings Ministerial Congregation, and fraternal organizations of Billings with authority to make an impartial survey of the needs of our people in Billings and Yellowstone County.

Those appointed to the committee are as follows: Joe Bosone, chairman, representative of the Congress of Industrial Organizations; H. I. Smith, secretary, representative of the Yellowstone Trades and Labor Assembly, American Federation of Labor; John Massey, representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; Dan Behan, representative of the Fraternal Order of Eagles; J. E. Johnson, Joe Stachlowsky, and Mac Whitten, representing the Workers' Alliance of America; Ed C. Backus and Albert Eichele, representing Industrial Local Union, No. 808; Rev. C. A. Wilson and Rev. George Jones, representing the Ministerial Association.

This committee made a complete survey of the situation existing in Billings and Yellowstone County. The investigation was free of partisanship and without bias. We contacted all responsible persons connected with the various relief agencies of Billings and Yellowstone County; namely, the Works Progress Administration, the Montana Reemployment Service, public welfare county administrator and field supervisor, and the Board of County Commissioners of Yellowstone County.

The work of this committee was performed fully within the law, and we are sure that all persons contacted are satisfied that a fair and impartial hearing was given them.

EXISTING CONDITIONS FOUND BY THE COMMITTEE

After an exhausting investigation of the relief situation we are of the opinion that an emergency exists in the city of Billings and Yellowstone County.

1. The Works Progress Administration will not improve now or in the future. The fact of the matter is that an order has been received for a further reduction in the W. P. A. quota to take effect May 8, 1939.

2. Reductions in the W. P. A. quota since March 1, 1939, have resulted in placing more people on the rolls of the public welfare department.

3. The Montana Reemployment Service did not and cannot take up the slack caused by reductions in W. P. A. quotas. There are 2,300 men and women who are awaiting assignment to work by the reemployment service—a staggering number of unemployed people, willing and able, but there is no work for them.

4. The relief organization in Billings cannot take care of those now on relief, except partially, to the extent that grants have been reduced 50 percent, single men and women receiving about $9 and families averaging $18.

5. Old-age assistance has also been reduced 50 percent, dependents receiving about $10 a month.

6. All officials contacted by the committee express the belief that present grants will not be increased and may be decreased because of W. P. A. quota reductions.

7. Officials of the public welfare board concurred in the opinion that an emergency exists which is beyond their control. Funds were not received upon application to the Montana State Welfare Board. Only one-third of the amount necessary to take care of relief in May is on hand, about $4,000, when $12,000 is needed.

8. Upon presentation of complaints to the board of county commissioners on May 4, 1939, in behalf of the unfortunates on relief, the board of commissioners emphatically told the committee that all their funds were exhausted and that the 6-mill levy was taxed to capacity. They admitted that an emergency existed, but they cited the fact that in March they requested an allocation of $12,000 from the State public welfare board and received only $8,000. For April they requested $6,000 and received only $4,000. The board of county commissioners further stated that they hope that the State public welfare board will be able to allocate more money to take care of the needy in Yellowstone County.

9. From the above facts gathered by the committee from all officers in charge of various relief agencies, we, your committee, strongly urge that a state of emergency be declared immediately by the officers representing the station of Montana, and that sufficient funds be appropriated and distributed to the county of Yellowstone and other counties in need.

We further request that the honorable Governor, the secretary of state, the attorney general, and the relief administrator take such action as deemed necessary to protect the people in need of food, clothing, and shelter. Unless this is done immediately, Montana will face a grave situation, for which the responsibility will be placed on the shoulders of those in authority, who could have avoided such a serious condition.

We are not criticizing any individuals, officers, or groups, but we hold that the conditions existing in the relief situation warrant prompt action by our State officers to alleviate the misery that now exists in Yellowstone County.

The unemployed people of this county are willing to work, but the economic conditions in this part of the State are so bad that there is no work for them. There are 2,300 persons unemployed, according to the official record of the Montana Reemployment Service. That speaks for itself.

We place the above state of conditions in your hands, gentlemen. The responsibility rests on your shoulders. Words cannot feed starving families. Words will not remedy the conditions facing the unemployed of this county. Words will not alleviate the plight of these unfortunates. Action is necessary on your part, and action is hereby demanded by this committee representing the unemployed of Yellowstone County.

Respectfully submitted.

Joe Bosone, chairman, Congress of Industrial Organizations; H. I. Smith, secretary, American Federation of Labor; John Massey, Veterans of Foreign Wars; Dan Behan, Fraternal Order of Eagles; J. E. Johnson, Workers' Alliance; Joe Stachlowsky, Workers' Alliance; Mac A. Whitten, Workers' Alliance; Ed C. Backus, Industrial Local No. 808; Albert Eichele, Industrial Local No. 808; C. A. Wilson, Ministerial Association; Rev. George Jones, Ministerial Association.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5501) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey a certain tract of land to the State of Oregon for use as a public park and recreational site, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 447) thereon.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2390) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 453) thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to reserve all points of order on the so-called Philippine bill.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1785) to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 448) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was recommitted the bill (S. 1554) to provide that the district judge for the western district of Washington, authorized to be appointed under the act of May 31, 1938, shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington, reported it without amendment and submitted an additional report (No. 449) thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1898. A bill to authorize further relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian reclamation projects (Rept. No. 450); and

H. R. 5076. A bill to authorize further relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian reclamation projects (Rept. No. 451).

Mr. CLARK of Missouri, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to which was referred the bill (S. 2229) authorizing and providing for the construction of additional facilities on the Canal Zone for the purposes of more adequately providing for the defense of the Panama Canal and for increasing its capacity for the future needs of interoceanic shipping, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 452) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1869) to protect interstate commerce from the dangers of unsound financial structures and to establish improved procedures and standards for financial rehabilitation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 454) thereon.

Mr. BYRNES, from the Select Committee on Government Organization, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) providing that reorganization plans Nos. I and II shall take effect on July 1, 1939, reported it without amendment.

EXPENSES INCIDENT TO HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 132 (submitted by Mr. PITTMAN on the 16th instant), reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate, during the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, not to exceed $250 for necessary expenses, including installation and operation of amplifying system, incident to hearings before said committee on the subject of proposed neutrality legislation.

SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES WITH THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, on yesterday I submitted a report from the Judiciary Committee on a bill which has been under consideration by the committee for several years. I refer to Senate bill 915, to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes. The Treasury Department had indicated a desire to be heard sometime ago. I called the Treasury Department before submitting the report and was informed the Department would be satisfied to submit a statement. I then suggested that if the statement were sent to me I would ask that it be placed in the RECORD for the information of Senators. I now ask unanimous consent that it be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, although I do not agree with it.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 17, 1939.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to a telephone conversation of May 16, 1939, from Senator LOGAN to Mr. E. H. Foley, Jr., general counsel of the Treasury Department, this Department is pleased to express its views on H. R. 6324, a bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, which it is understood Senator LOGAN intends to substitute for S. 915, a bill of the same title, introduced by him on January 24, 1939, and referred to your committee. The bill vitally affects the Treasury Department and after a careful study of its provisions, the Department feels it would be unfortunate if the bill were enacted in its present form.

Section 2 of the bill concerns administrative rules implementing statutes. The term "administrative rules" is defined by section 1 to include rules, regulations, orders, and amendments thereto of general application, issued by officers in the executive branch of the United States Government, interpreting the terms of statutes they are respectively charged with administering. Subsection (a) of section 2 provides that all administrative rules, and amendments thereto, which implement or fill in the details of any statute affecting personal or property rights shall be issued by the head of the agency (which is defined to include departments and independent establishments), and by each independent agency (which is defined to include boards, commissions, authorities, and other organizations) charged with the administration of the statute only after publication of notice and public hearings. Such rules and amendments are to be published in the Federal Register within 10 days after their approval by the head of the agency concerned, and are not to be effective until such publication, except when the President declares that a public emergency exists. Rules under all statutes hereafter enacted must be issued within 1 year after the enactment of such statutes, subject to the adoption thereafter of further rules and amendments.

The Treasury Department recognizes that formal hearings on proposed regulations are sometimes desirable and would have no objection to a requirement that public hearings be held in cases in which such action would facilitate the issuance of regulations. The proposed bill, however, would require that formal hearings be held not only in the case of new rules, but also where old rules are amended or repealed, regardless of whether any useful purpose would be served thereby. Moreover, section 2 (b) would seem to require the issuance of rules under all statutes hereafter enacted, whether or not such rules are necessary to efficient administration. No sound reason for such a requirement exists.

It is noted that all rules and regulations must be published in the Federal Register within 10 days after their approval and are not to become effective until such publication except when the President declares that a public emergency exists. Since the regulation does not become effective under this provision until publication, it is believed that the time limitation is unnecessary and might result in the invalidation by a court of a regulation, merely because it was not published within 10 days after approval even though no one was adversely affected by the delay.

Section 2 (c) provides that any person substantially interested in the effects of an administrative rule in force on the date of approval of this act may petition the head of the agency concerned for a reconsideration of such rule and thus require the head of the agency, after publication of notice and public hearing, if requested, to determine whether such rule shall be continued in force, modified, or rescinded. Thus the bill not only provides for the review of administrative rules to be promulgated in the future but also permits any person affected by any rule theretofore promulgated to petition for its reconsideration. Such reconsideration would be required merely upon the petition of any party substantially interested in the effects of an administrative rule regardless of whether he has any justifiable grievance and regardless of the fact that the rule may have been adopted after the most careful consideration and may have operated satisfactorily over a long period of time. This would open for continuous review all of the innumerable rules and regulations promulgated by administrative agencies since the inception of the Government. Furthermore, under this provision there is no limitation upon the number of individuals who could require separate hearings upon a given rule. Obviously, such a provision would make possible a flood of unjustified petitions by persons with fancied grievances and would impose an undue burden upon the head of the agency administering the statute under which the rule was issued.

Section 3 of the bill confers jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, upon petition filed within 30 days from the date any administrative rule is published in the Federal Register, to determine the validity of such rule and provides that the court may render a declaratory judgment, holding a rule invalid for violation of the Constitution, for conflict with a statute, for lack of authority conferred upon the agency issuing it by the statute pursuant to which it was issued, or for failure of the agency to comply with the provisions of section 2 previously described. Under the section, a rule held to be invalid is to have no force or effect except to confer immunity. Section 3 further provides that nothing contained therein is to prevent the determination of the validity of any rule in any suit in a court of the United States as authorized by law.

Under this section, as now drafted, any person, regardless of whether he is affected by the rule, may petition the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia to determine its validity. This is a radical departure from the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 400), which is limited to "cases of actual controversy" in a constitutional sense (Aetna Life Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Haworth (1937), 300 U. S. 227). It is recognized that the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has the status both of a constitutional and of a legislative court and that the Congress may impose nonjudicial functions upon it. However, the most significant fact with respect to the section under discussion is that even though provision were made for such review, the United States Supreme Court would have no constitutional power to review a declaratory judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia holding an administrative rule invalid since this would involve an administrative proceeding and not a case or controversy within the meaning of the judiciary article of the Constitution (Radio Comm. v. General Electric Co. (1930), 281 U. S. 464). Thus, the effect of section 3 seems comparable to clothing the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia with the absolute power to declare a statute unconstitutional without review by the United States Supreme Court.

While a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia holding a rule invalid would be absolutely binding upon the Government, a rule sustained by that court may, under section 3, be subsequently attacked by an aggrieved party in an actual controversy and the rule found invalid by another court. Not only would this procedure be highly inequitable, but it would also be completely ineffectual as a means of securing prompt decision as to the validity of administrative rules.

Section 4 concerns the establishment of a system of administrative review. It provides that the head of each agency shall establish intra-agency boards consisting of three employees, one of whom shall be a lawyer and act as chairman, for the hearing of administrative appeals. Existing intra-agency boards are reestablished and are to function in accordance with the act. Upon the request of any person aggrieved by a decision (which is defined as "any affirmative or negative decision, order, or act in specific controversies which determines the issue therein involved") of an officer or employee of any agency within 20 days after the receipt of notice by registered mail of such act, failure to act, or decision, the head of the agency concerned is to refer the claim or controversy to an intra-agency board for review. The boards are to give a full and fair hearing, and they are authorized to subpena witnesses and documents and to hear examination and cross-examination of witnesses. There is to be a record of the proceedings as in a trial court. The board is to make written findings of fact and a separate decision or order thereon, which shall be subject to the written approval, disapproval, or modification of the head of the agency concerned. This section also seeks to provide for a uniform procedure of review before the independent boards and commissions.

In an article entitled "Prospectus for the Further Study of Federal Administrative Law," appearing in the February 1938 issue of the Yale Law Journal, Mr. A. H. Feller stated with reference to this provision:

"* * * A committee of the American Bar Association has recently recommended that all heads of departments be required to set up review boards, to which any person 'aggrieved by a decision, act, or failure to act' by any officer or employee of the Department may resort. Would this extend to the refusal of an officer of the Department of State to recommend to the Secretary that a reciprocal-trade agreement be negotiated, or to the rejection of a bid by a procurement officer? Would it not entail so much expense and delay, so many possibilities of confusion, that it would discredit the whole idea of intradepartmental review? It would be of greatest value to know to what extent review boards are necessary. I find it hard to believe that every 'decision, act, or failure to act' should be subject to this sort of review. Here, as in many other places, inquiry and experiment should precede general innovation."

The Department concurs in Mr. Feller's views with respect to this provision.

By multiplying opportunities for hearings, all of which must include, among other things, power of subpena, the right of cross-examination of witnesses, the filing of formal pleadings, and the making of written records, opportunity for delay is too clearly afforded. Numerous administrative and judicial hearings are provided for if a petitioner desires to take a rule or action under it through the court of ultimate resort. The holding of the number of hearings provided for would require months and perhaps years if the right were fully exercised by ingenious counsel. The bill, by overextending the opportunities for delay, affords an opportunity for the use of dilatory tactics which may result in completely paralyzing administrative authority.

To cite a specific example, a decision of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department that a low bidder lacks the technical or financial qualifications necessary to undertake a contract, would be subject to appeal under section 4, and, pending consideration of the appeal, the time for acceptance of the bids would probably expire. Upon readvertisement the same bidder might again submit the low bid, and a repetition of the same procedure would be possible. Purchasing and construction work might be indefinitely held up under such circumstances. Again, after the award of contracts, the bill would make it possible for contractors to defer indefinitely the effectiveness of administrative decisions in much the same way. Questions as to the qualifications of sureties and a great number of questions as to contract requirements, except as prevented by specific contract provisions, might become the subject of long, frequent, and pointless argument before contractors would be obliged to proceed.

It should be noted that while the bill, in section 4 (d), provides that the Board may find that the petitioning party has been damaged by the inaction or delay of administrative officials and may set the amount of pecuniary damages suffered by the aggrieved person because of such inaction or delay (such amount of damages to be certified to Congress for an appropriation to be paid to the aggrieved party), no provision is made for damages which may well be suffered by the United States in the delay and inaction caused by the proposed statutory privileges exercised by the aggrieved person.

Under the provisions of section 5, any person aggrieved by a final decision or order of any agency may obtain a review of such decision or order by filing a petition with the circuit court of appeals, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, or the Court of Claims. Any such decision or order is to be set aside if it appears (1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous, or (2) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence, or (3) that the decision or order is not supported by the findings of fact, or (4) that the decision or order was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded the aggrieved party for a full and fair hearing, or (5) that the decision or order is beyond the jurisdiction of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, or (6) that the decision or order infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States, or (7) that the decision or order is otherwise contrary to law. The first ground for setting aside a decision or order, namely, "that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous," would, if adopted, require the courts to weigh the evidence in all cases and would in effect bring about trials de novo on the administrative record. This would result in the substitution of the judgment of the court for that of the administrative agency.

With reference to this problem, certain language in an article by the Honorable Robert M. Cooper, Special Assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, entitled "Administrative Justice and the Role of Discretion," which appeared in the February 1938 issue of the Yale Law Journal, is particularly relevant. In this article Mr. Cooper stated:

"It is hardly reasonable to assume that a judiciary, completely untrained in the problems of public administration, is more capable or more likely to reach proper results than experienced administrators selected primarily for their specialized knowledge, technical competence, and thorough familiarity with the intricacies of modern governmental policies. In recognition of this truth the tendency of legislative practice has been in the direction of according greater administrative finality to official action.

"* * * As a practical matter, the judiciary is no more fitted to enter the specialized fields of public administration nor endowed with the technical competence necessary to solve the intricate problems arising in connection with the enforcement of modern legislative policies than are the legislative bodies, which were forced to delegate such functions to specialized tribunals. Obviously, then, the courts are in no position to supervise the exercise of discretionary authority by these specialized tribunals except in those cases where there is a clear abuse of power or authority. In any event, it is difficult to justify the courts' position in attempting to substitute their own judgment in matters of discretion or legislative policy for that of an experienced administrative agency. Similarly, but to an even greater extent, the practice of permitting a complete trial de novo on certain fundamental issues which inevitably involve the exercise of discretion reaches beyond the outermost bound of sound governmental practice."

Section 6 provides for the assessment of damages when the court finds that there was no substantial basis for the petition for review. While it authorizes the courts to impose damages in any case where there was no substantial basis for the petition for review and the decision of the agency is affirmed, two practical considerations militate against an assessment of damages: First, it is extremely difficult to prove that any petition for appeal is filed merely for delay; and, second, sufficient opportunity for delay exists under the provisions of the bill prior to appeal to the courts. The provision of this section for allowance of "cost on review" seems inadequate. One of the most important elements of cost would be that of preparing and certifying the administrative record, and there should be specific provision for the cost of that record. Under the bill as now drafted it would probably be necessary for the Government to bear this expense, and groundless litigation would probably be encouraged.

Preliminary to consideration of section 7 of the bill, which concerns the continuance of existing judicial remedies and the exemption of certain governmental agencies from the terms of the bill, it should be stated that the bill makes no distinction between matters pertaining to the external relations of the agency and those pertaining to purely internal operations and affairs. The bill may well be construed to apply to matters concerning internal affairs, such as promotion of employees, regulations regarding leave, requirement of bonds, and a host of other matters relating solely to the internal government of the agency. Weight is given to such construction, in light of the doctrine of expressio unius exclusio alterius, by subsection (b) of section 7, which provides that the act shall not apply to any case where the aggrieved party "has failed to receive appointment or employment by an agency or independent agency." Under that doctrine the express exemption of matters relating to failure to receive appointment would seem to preclude a construction exempting other internal affairs. It is believed that the application of the provisions of the bill to purely internal operations could only serve to hamper the efficient operation of the agencies concerned.

In this connection it is noted that section 7 provides that nothing in the act shall apply to or affect any matter "concerning or relating to the internal revenue, customs, * * * laws." Since this language would not prevent the proposed bill from applying to internal matters of the Bureau of Internal Revenue or the Bureau of Customs, the Treasury Department recommends that (if your committee should determine to report the bill favorably) these two agencies be expressly exempted from the operation of the bill, as was done in the case of the Federal Reserve Board and other enumerated agencies. The Department further recommends that the Coast Guard be expressly exempted from the provisions of the bill, so that it will be made clear that matters concerning that organization fall within the exception of matters "concerning or relating to the conduct of military or naval operations."

While the Treasury Department is in sympathy with any efforts to improve administrative organization and procedure, it believes that any legislation designed to accomplish this purpose should be prepared only after careful study and consultation with those intimately aware of the problems faced by the various agencies of the Government.

Therefore the Treasury Department recommends that H. R. 6324, or any similar legislation, be not enacted until the comprehensive study of problems of administrative organization and procedure now being made by the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure and an advisory interdepartmental committee thereof is completed.

I have been advised by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that, in view of the study now being conducted, the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the program of the President.

Very truly yours,

STEPHEN B. GIBBONS,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 17, 1939, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 90. An act to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes;

S. 198. An act to provide that records certified by the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court, in response to writs of certiorari, may include material portions of the evidence, and for other purposes;

S. 242. An act relating to the disposition of funds derived from the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands;

S. 542. An act to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Garrison, N. Dak.;

S. 1281. An act to prohibit reproductions of official badges, identification cards, and other insignia;

S. 2050. An act to authorize a sale of the old Carson City (Nev.) Mint site and building notwithstanding the provisions of Joint Resolution No. 18 of February 23, 1865; and

S. 2244. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to accept real estate devised to the United States by the late Lizzie Beck, of Mena, Ark., and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MILLER:

S. 2450. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. HOLMAN:

S. 2451. A bill to prohibit the immigration of aliens into the United States during the present period of abnormal unemployment and the expenditure of public funds for the relief of the unemployed; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. NEELY:

S. 2452. A bill granting an increase of pension to Isabell Postlethwait; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NYE:

S. 2453. A bill to provide for insurance by the Farm Credit Administration of loans made by financial institutions for the purpose of enabling borrowers to purchase livestock for restocking or herd-foundation purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. GEORGE:

S. 2454. A bill to relieve disbursing officers and certifying officers of the Veterans' Administration from liability for payment where recovery of such payment is waived under existing laws administered by the Veterans' Administration; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 2455. A bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Mount Vernon, Alexandria & Washington Railway Co., a corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DAVIS:

S. 2456. A bill for the relief of Mary Robinson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 2457. A bill for the relief of Clayton W. Curtis; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT OF BONNEVILLE PROJECT ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2375) to amend the Bonneville Project Act, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF NADINE SANDERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1164) for the relief of Nadine Sanders, which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$1,096.40" and insert "$750."

Mr. HATCH. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. BURKE, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESENTATION OF PORTRAIT OF SENATOR CONNALLY TO TEXAS SENATE

[Mr. McKELLAR asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the proceedings of the Texas State Senate of

Tuesday, May 2, 1939, on the occasion of the presentation of a portrait of Senator CONNALLY, which appears in the Appendix.]

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD—STATEMENT BY SENATOR WAGNER

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Senator WAGNER before the House Committee on Labor concerning the National Labor Relations Act and the activities of the National Labor Relations Board, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR TOWNSEND BEFORE NATIONAL ECONOMY LEAGUE

[Mr. MCNARY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Senator TOWNSEND at the seventh annual dinner of the National Economy League, held in New York City on May 16, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY THE POSTMASTER GENERAL AT ROCK ISLAND, ILL.

[Mr. SLATTERY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Hon. James A. Farley, Postmaster General, at the annual convention of the Illinois Chapter of the National Association of Postmasters, held at Rock Island, Ill., May 13, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADMISSION OF GERMAN REFUGEE CHILDREN

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from the Ministerial Association of Raleigh and Wake County, N. C., regarding the admission of German refugee children into the United States, and also certain editorials on the same subject, which appear in the Appendix.]

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will proceed to state the amendments reported by the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Naval Establishment, office of the Secretary, care of lepers, etc., island of Guam", on page 4, line 16, after the word "maintenance", to strike out "$21,000" and insert "$22,000", and in line 17, after the words "in all", to strike out "$36,000" and insert "$37,000", so as to read:

Naval station, island of Guam: For maintenance and care of lepers, special patients, and for other purposes, including cost of transfer of lepers from Guam to the island of Culion, in the Philippines, and their maintenance, $22,000; for educational purposes, $15,000; in all, $37,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Operation and conservation of naval petroleum reserves", on page 5, line 19, after the word "reserves", to strike out "$64,500" and insert "$70,000", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to carry out the provisions contained in the act approved June 4, 1920 (34 U. S. C. 524), requiring him to conserve, develop, use, and operate the naval petroleum reserves, $70,000, of which amount not to exceed $20,000 shall be available for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to oppose this bill or to delay its passage. I think, however, in fairness to the Members of the Senate who are not members of the committee, that a statement should be made by the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] concerning the bill and why the bill carries the appropriations which it provides, and what are the general aims and purposes of the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I shall be glad to conform to the request of the Senator from Oregon.

The Appropriations Committee, of course, does not attempt to establish a policy for the Government in naval matters. That policy is considered by another committee, the Naval Affairs Committee. The Appropriations Committee is interested only in determining the amount of money to be appropriated annually to carry out the legislative policy determined by the Congress. That policy having been determined, the House of Representatives has appropriated for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1, the sum of $773,000,000. The Senate committee has reduced the amount provided by the bill below the amount recommended for appropriation by the House, the reduction being due in great measure to the determination of the committee not to appropriate for the construction of the lighter-than-air ship heretofore authorized by the Congress.

In addition to the amount of $371,000, indicated in the report as the reduction below the total provided by the House, the Senate committee recommends that there be stricken from the bill the authorization carried by the House providing for carrying into the next fiscal year the $500,000 appropriated in the deficiency bill of last year. The amount of the appropriation this year is in excess of any amount heretofore appropriated by Congress in time of peace, but exceeds the appropriation for 1939 by $149,000,000. Sixty-three percent of the $149,000,000 is due to the shipbuilding program and the program for aviation. Fourteen percent of it is due to an increase in shore activities, which increase is due, of course, to the increased program. Twenty-three percent is due to the increase in personnel, the increase in maintenance, and such items as fuel.

The amount of money that must be appropriated for the Navy is necessarily dependent upon the shipbuilding program authorized by the Congress. When we increase the number of ships it follows that there must be an increase in the enlisted personnel, which goes up to 110,000 for the next fiscal year and at the end of that time will be increased to 116,000 as ships go into commission. It means an increase in fuel, it means an increase in armament, and in everything that is essential for a rounded and well-balanced Navy.

If Senators are interested in the matter, they might look in the record of the hearings, and they will find the number of ships that will be in commission during the next fiscal year. It is interesting to see that when the program authorized by the Congress is under construction, the United States will have a total of 199 ships in commission. The British Empire has 204. Japan will have in commission 223 ships. The tonnage figures I do not carry in my mind.

In addition to the amount of money which is carried for the construction of ships, which is the chief item, there is carried in the bill $88,298,000 for aviation. That is the amount that was requested by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator leaves the item respecting the construction of ships, I desire to ask him a question for information. Does the contemplated construction of a 45,000-ton battleship appear specifically in the bill elsewhere than in the amendment on page 42 providing for certain shipbuilding facilities in Philadelphia? Is that item specifically in the bill somewhere else?

Mr. BYRNES. I think so. Any item of construction would appear in several places; but only $10,000,000 of this amount goes for the construction of new ships which are initiated by the bill. Not all of this amount is due to the 45,000-ton battleship, but the largely increased appropriation is due to the ships heretofore authorized, and begun last year. The Senator from Michigan knows that the designing of ships takes a very long time; and that accounts for the relatively small amount of appropriation which is carried for ships, the construction of which is to be initiated during the next fiscal year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have been searching the bill, trying to find any specific language which indicates the initial appropriation for 45,000-ton battleships.

Mr. BYRNES. The appropriation is under "Replacement of Navy." That is the title under which construction is authorized and carried. That term is used, I suppose, on the theory that the new ship replaces a ship that goes out of commission. The determination of naval authorities is that a battleship becomes overage at 26 years; and under the limitation-of-armaments treaty, whenever a ship had been in commission for 26 years, the Navy was authorized to replace it. Consequently the bill carries the title "Replacement of Navy"; and that is the item under which the appropriation is carried for initiating the 45,000-ton battleship.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The replacement item is a lump-sum item?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The distribution of the item, then, is at the discretion of the Department?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct; over the various departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Navigation", on page 8, line 13, after the word "for", to strike out "$218,000" and insert "$222,290", so as to read:

Instruction: For postgraduate instruction of officers in other than civil government and literature, including such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act approved January 16, 1936 (34 U. S. C. 1073), and for special instruction, education, and individual training of officers and enlisted men at home and abroad, including maintenance of students abroad, except aviation training and submarine training otherwise appropriated for, $222,290.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 2, after the name "Navy", to strike out "$1,902,190" and insert "$1,906,480", so as to read:

In all, training, education, and welfare, Navy, $1,906,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Ordnance, ordnance and ordnance stores, Navy", on page 22, line 25, after the name "West Virginia", to strike out "$31,948,000" and insert "$32,548,000", so as to read:

For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material for the armament of ships; for the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances; for the purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder; for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work under the cognizance of the Bureau of Ordnance; for furniture at naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, naval ordnance plants, and proving grounds; for technical books; plant appliances as now defined by the "Navy Classification of Accounts"; for machinery and machine tools; for accident prevention; for experimental work in connection with the development of ordnance material for the Navy; for maintenance of proving grounds, powder factory, torpedo stations, gun factory, ammunition depots, and naval ordnance plants, and for target practice; not to exceed $20,000 for minor improvements to buildings, grounds, and appurtenances of a character which can be performed by regular station labor; for payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed, and payment of the travel expenses of such persons if they be members of the Naval Reserve ordered to active duty; for the maintenance, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled freight and passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes at naval ammunition depots, naval proving grounds, naval ordnance plants, and naval torpedo stations; for the pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, naval ordnance plants, and naval ammunition depots, and for care and operation of schools at ordnance stations at Indianhead, Md.; Dahlgren, Va.; and South Charleston, W. Va., $32,548,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts—pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel", on page 25, line 14, after the word "list", to strike out "except eight for assignments filled on September 30, 1937, exclusive of the assignment at the Naval Mine Depot, Yorktown, Va., three for duty exclusively with the Maritime Commission, two for duty exclusively with the naval petroleum reserves, and one for duty at the Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C." and insert "except seven for assignments filled on September 30, 1937, exclusive of the assignments at the Naval Mine Depot, Yorktown, Va., and in the Treasury Department, three for duty exclusively with the Maritime Commission, two for duty exclusively in connection with the naval petroleum reserves, one for duty as curator of the Naval Academy Museum, and one for duty at the Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C.", so as to read:

Pay of naval personnel: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, pay $37,037,664, including not to exceed $1,887,045 for increased pay for making aerial flights, no part of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by more than five officers above the rank of captain, nor by nonflying officers or observers at rates in excess of those prescribed by law for the Army, which shall be the legal maximum rates as to such nonflying officers or observers; rental allowance, $7,698,476; subsistence allowance, $4,657,071; in all, $49,393,211; officers on the retired list, $9,801,590; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $7,865; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $9,452,619; interest on deposits by men, $8,400; pay of petty officers (not to exceed an average of 9,044 chief petty officers, of which number those with a permanent appointment as chief petty officer shall not exceed an average of 7,900), seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Bureau of Fisheries, enlisted men, men in trade schools, pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, extra pay for men as authorized by law, and cash prizes (not to exceed $113,050) for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, communication, and engineering competitions, $96,252,950; outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharges for bad conduct or undesirability or inaptitude, reimbursement in kind of clothing to persons in the Navy for losses in cases of marine or aircraft disasters or in the operation of water- or air-borne craft, and the authorized issue of clothing and equipment to the members of the Nurse Corps, $2,195,222; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court martial, $35,445, and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; pay and allowances of the Nurse Corps, including assistant superintendents, directors, and assistant directors—pay, $545,740; rental allowance, $38,400; subsistence allowance, $24,156; pay retired list, $315,333; in all, $923,629; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps; pay and allowances of transferred and assigned men of the Fleet Naval Reserve, $15,144,575; reimbursement for losses of property as provided in the act approved October 6, 1917 (34 U. S. C. 981, 982), as amended by the act of March 3, 1927 (34 U. S. C. 983), $10,000; payment of 6 months' death gratuity, $230,039; in all $183,455,545; and, except during war or national emergency declared by the President to exist, no part of such sum shall be available to pay active-duty pay and allowances to officers on the retired list, except seven for assignments filled on September 30, 1937, exclusive of the assignments at the Naval Mine Depot, Yorktown, Va., and in the Treasury Department, three for duty exclusively with the Maritime Commission, two for duty exclusively in connection with the naval petroleum reserves, one for duty as curator of the Naval Academy Museum, and one for duty at the Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C., and except retired officers temporarily ordered to active duty as members of retiring and selection boards as authorized by law:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Yards and Docks—Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks", on page 41, line 25, after the figures "$510,000", to insert a semicolon and "improvement of shipways No. 2 for the construction of a 45,000-ton battleship, $560,000", so as to read:

Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.: Material assembly shop and accessories for new ship construction and power-service lines, $460,000; improvement of pier No. 2 and fitting-out pier No. 5 to facilitate new ship construction $510,000; improvement of shipways No. 2 for the construction of a 45,000-ton battleship, $560,000;

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the record which precedes the appropriation for a 45,000-ton battleship. The pending amendment specifically relates to that subject.

When the super-supernavy authorization bill was passed 1 year ago, when it left the Senate it carried the following proviso:

Provided, That no vessel authorized by this subsection of a tonnage in excess of 35,000 tons shall be laid down until the President has determined that a capital ship of a tonnage in excess of 35,000 tons has been officially projected, appropriated for, or laid down by another power.

That happened to be my amendment. It was adopted by the Senate, suffered the usual fate of a Senate amendment in the conference with the House, and was lost. When the conference report came to the Senate, however, and the report was in charge of the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who was the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, I asked him what happened to the proviso, and I read from the subsequent dialog:

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator whether that indicates any change in the attitude of the Department as repeatedly expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts upon the floor, namely, that there is no purpose to go beyond 35,000 tons except as it is determined that there is such construction elsewhere?

Mr. WALSH. All my information is that there is no purpose, no intention, and no desire to go beyond capital ships of 35,000 tons unless some other nation builds a capital ship of a higher tonnage.

Then, skipping some language:

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would I, then, correctly understand the able Senator from Massachusetts, if I were to feel that the bill still means what the Senate undertook to say in words that it should mean?

Mr. WALSH. In my opinion, it does. I think the intention of the Senator from Michigan has been fully carried out.

That being so, Mr. President, I beg to inquire of either the Senator from South Carolina or the Senator from Massachusetts what definite, specific proof and showing has been made to either committee that some other major power is now actually constructing ships in excess of 35,000 tons, as a basis for this item in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. It is my information that the British Government have already contracted for ships in excess of 35,000 tons. I assume that the reason for that is that some other major power has actually engaged in the building of 45,000-ton ships.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, at the time of the controversy on the floor of the Senate a year ago the implication was that something was being done by Japan which indicated the possibility that she might be building these larger ships. It was impossible at that time to get any specific information on the subject. A year has now gone by. Am I to understand that we still have no specific information regarding the Japanese situation, but that we are now asked to embark on a 45,000-ton battleship program, not on account of Japan, but because we find that the democracy of Great Britain is engaged in building such ships? Is that the rival ship against which we are now making our appropriation?

Mr. WALSH. I cannot positively state to the Senator that we have information that Japan is constructing a 45,000-ton ship. I have inferred that such information is in the possession of the Navy Department. In order that there may be no question about it, I will communicate with the Navy Department, and give whatever definite information they have to the Senator very shortly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, before the Appropriations Committee of the House the positive statement was made by the Chief of Operations of the Navy that Great Britain was constructing a ship of greater tonnage than 35,000 tons, and there was discussion with reference to that matter by the able authorities of Great Britain and this country; and while Japan, following its policy of not disclosing information, has not definitely advised this Government as to what is being done, the best information our authorities have is that Japan is constructing a battleship in excess of 35,000 tons.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I understand the British battleships to which the Senator refers are 42,000-ton battleships. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. That is my recollection of the information. The positive statement was made by a naval authority to the House committee that that was being done at this time by Great Britain.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think we are entitled to the facts about this matter. My opinion is that when the facts are known it will be found that Japan is not building this sized battleship, that the building program started with Great Britain, and that it was started after an understanding with this Government. We are entitled to know the real facts, and if they have not been ascertained, they ought to be ascertained by the proper committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, it was testified before the House committee that Great Britain was building ships in excess of 35,000 tons, and that up to that date it had not been possible to obtain positive information. The Senator states he has positive information. Of course that is more definite than our information. The information Congress has from the Navy Department is that they have not been able to obtain such information that they could say definitely that that is being done. Their best information is that it is true, but they did not make the positive statement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, that was precisely the situation we were in 1 year ago; it was all a matter of conjecture, and even the conjecture upon which the information was based proved to be more or less of a broken reed because, according to my recollection, the reliance was upon the publication of an item in an Italian newspaper, which subsequently repudiated the publication upon which we were basing our suspicions.

My whole feeling about the matter is precisely the same as it was 1 year ago. If we have to go into the 45,000-ton-battleship business as a matter of rational national defense, well and good, but I do not want the United States to be in the position—and this is the same attitude I took 1 year ago—of leading the world in the construction of 45,000-ton battleships, because the moment we set the tempo at that speed in the construction of battleships we render ultimately obsolete all other battleships, and the first thing we know we will have precipitated the entire world upon this increased building tempo and size.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan if a 45,000-ton battleship is a desirable weapon, and it will contribute toward the establishment of an adequate American Navy, why should we have to wait until some other nation builds it and follow their suit?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me answer the Senator immediately.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator, if he will permit——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas believes that world affairs and the real cause of peace require the United States, not for war but in its own national interest, to have the best navy in the world.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not quarreling with that statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. If Japan should conquer China and organize 400,000,000 Chinamen, then what chance would we have to whip her on land? Our answer is that we must command the sea. If we purpose to command the sea, why should we sit around and wait until England builds a 45,000-ton battleship, or Japan builds one, and then build ours? If we are to have one at all, we ought to build it first.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me answer the Senator. The first reason why we should not do what the Senator from Texas suggests is because the Senate of the United States and the Congress voted otherwise.

Mr. CONNALLY. It can vote differently whenever it gets ready, can it not?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; but that is how the record stands today, and I know of no reason why we should not live up to the record as it has thus far been created.

I am opposed to competition in armaments. I subscribe to the Senator's theory that we must have 100 percent adequacy in our national defense. I decline to concede that we have to lead the world in the construction of larger battleships than any other power has ever built in order to have adequacy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I have just communicated with Admiral Leahy, the Chief of Operations of the Navy, and he confirms what the Senator from South Carolina and I said about England building 40,000-ton battleships and two 42,000-ton battleships. He says that the only information they have with reference to Japan is that published in Italian newspapers, which he referred to as "Italian news reports"——

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will excuse me, may I ask him whether these are the same old Italian news reports of a year and a half ago, which we were discussing in the debate last January and February?

Mr. WALSH. I do not recall that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will permit, it is quite important, because those have been repudiated, and I put the repudiation in the RECORD myself 1 year ago.

Mr. WALSH. Admiral Leahy says these reports indicate that Japan is building two 45,000-ton battleships. He does say, however, that they know of their own knowledge that Japan is building battleships beyond the usual size of battleships. They have positive proof of that, but they can get no details and no further information.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let me ask the able Senator from Massachusetts this question——

Mr. WALSH. I am merely quoting what has just been reported.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have a profound respect for the good faith of the Senator from Massachusetts, and his sound conscience, as every other Member of the Senate has——

Mr. WALSH. I can reciprocate that compliment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator stated to me in the debate 1 year ago that the authorization bill was left, as he understood it, on such a basis that we would not proceed to build larger than 35,000-ton battleships unless we were authentically advised that other powers were engaged in building larger battleships. I now ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he is satisfied, upon the basis of the information which he has, that the conditions precedent have been met.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I must concede to the Senator that I would prefer and would like to have more definite information with respect to Japan, but we simply cannot get it. Our committee has been trying to get some definite information as to what operations Japan is pursuing or what airplane bases she is locating, or what she is doing in the mandated islands south of Guam. We can get absolutely no accurate information. No one is allowed to land on those islands. No vessel is allowed to approach them. We know that Japan has opened up, or claims to be operating, or is about to operate, a commercial air line between Japan and those islands. Their purpose in establishing a commercial air line in islands which have practically no inhabitants and to which there is very little if any travel, is significant. I speak of that simply as illustrating how very difficult it is to obtain the slightest information from Japan in reference to her military movements.

As the Senator knows, and as appeared in the debate last year, actual communications were sent by the British Government and our own Government to the authorities in Japan in an effort to obtain this information, and it was denied them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator a further collateral question because of his large experience on the subject? If battle fleets hereafter are built around 45,000-ton battleships, will not that hasten the obsolescence of all battleships of lesser size than 45,000 tons, so far as utility is concerned?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so. I may say that the information with respect to what Japan was building was to the effect that the battleship was of 46,000 tons, not 45,000 tons.

Mr. President, the sole fighting strength of the Navy is the fleet. The fleet includes battleships, heavy cruisers and light cruisers, destroyers, submarines, and airships. The men of the various units are trained to coordinate and to work together, and each unit has a separate and distinct function in carrying out an attack. The smaller cruiser has its function, as well as the larger cruiser, and the smaller battleship has its function in time of war, as well as the larger battleship. The difference between the smaller and the larger battleships, as I understand, and as the Senator knows, lies in capacity for a mass attack. All the other ships are operated with the idea of leading up to a mass attack by the battleships upon the enemy fleet. A battleship perhaps can be described for this purpose as a fortress in the middle of the sea, and when the opportune time comes the battleships are expected to thrust their heavy guns and their powerful weapons against the enemy. On that basis I cannot conceive that the smaller battleships would become obsolete.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I know the Senator shared my view a year ago that it would be quite a serious matter for us to step up the battleship tempo from 35,000 to 45,000 tons. It would be a serious matter if any responsibility rested upon us for initiating and pioneering in that tempo.

Mr. WALSH. I certainly agree with the Senator from Michigan. I should be reluctant to encourage our Government to build any larger battleships than we would be expected to meet in a naval attack at sea by warships of some other government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there seems to be no conclusive information available, except that the British are building 40,000- and 42,000-ton battleships.

Mr. WALSH. And that Japan is building something beyond the usual type of battleships, about which we can obtain no definite information.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And that information is based upon something which appeared in an Italian newspaper.

Mr. WALSH. Part of the information is from the Italian newspapers, but part of the information is information which the Navy itself has been able to get, but not of a detailed, definite character.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, the basis has not been laid to justify the construction of 45,000-ton battleships.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I share with the Senator from Michigan the belief that we ought not to take the lead in the world in enlarging battleships. But the Senator will remember, I am quite sure, that there appeared in the public press the statement now made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that our Government, desiring to stay within the present limits of size of battleships built by other countries, sent an official communication to the Government of Japan asking for information as to whether she was building battleships larger than all existing battleships, and, as I remember, the Government of Japan has refused to give that information.

I should like to say, if the Senator will permit in his time——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have concluded.

Mr. NORRIS. That I think he ought to go a little bit further in answering the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who said that we ought not to pay any attention to the size of battleships being built by foreign countries; that we ought to have larger battleships than those of any other country. Of course, that argument is always made. A great many persons believe in it and think it is sound.

However, the history of battleship construction and armaments on the sea is just the story of one country trying to build a larger ship than any other country has built, and that is a program which has no limit to it whatever. I should hate to see my Government take the initiative in that kind of program. No one on earth can tell what the end of such a program will be.

It seems to me we must remember that there are peoples who think their countries are as great as ours, and it is all right for them to think so—countries which can build battleships as well as we can, and if we build a 45,000-ton battleship it will be an invitation to all the governments of the world to build battleships of 50,000 tons instead of 45,000 tons.

Mr. President, it seems to me, however, that logically we have a right to be moved in what we do by what other nations are doing. We cannot sit idly by and see other nations build larger vessels, and not do something ourselves. Other nations would naturally feel as we do. Therefore, it seems to me we should place ourselves on the same basis as other nations with respect to naval armament.

If Japan is building two battleships, as reports indicate, in excess even of 45,000 tons, or if Japan refuses to give information when our Government communicates officially with her, it seems to me that is a pretty good indication that she is building ships of greater tonnage than present battleship tonnage. It goes a great way with me as an argument for voting for a 45,000-ton battleship.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There are a good many "ifs" in the Senator's premises before he reaches his conclusion.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that, but I do not see how we can reason otherwise. We are lacking in definite information.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If our Navy Department actually wants to ascertain whether or not a 45,000-ton battleship is building anywhere on this globe it is simply inconceivable to me that it cannot obtain the information.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me we should be able to do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not see how a 45,000-ton battleship can remain hidden.

Mr. NORRIS. Nor do I, Mr. President. But the United States cannot send spies to a foreign country to ascertain the situation. We do not want to do that. We are operating openly. If our Government asks another government whether it is violating the existing understanding concerning the size of battleships and is told it is none of our business, and will give us no information, I think we have a right to draw the conclusion that it is violating the understanding.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to call the attention of the Sentor from Nebraska to a quotation from the hearings before the House committee. Representative SCRUGHAM is asking Admiral Leahy about the Japanese rumor:

> Mr. SCRUGHAM. And the Japanese program is entirely unknown? We have no accurate knowledge of it whatever?
> Admiral LEAHY. We have no knowledge of what the Japanese are doing other than the press reports.

Mr. President, it does not seem to me the press reports suffice to fill the requirements that were put into the naval authorization bill 1 year ago and justify an increase in the tonnage of battleships from 35,000 to 45,000 tons.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NYE. That is directly in line with a thought I wanted to leave with the Senate. Surely since the press reports and the rumors have been so thoroughly discredited as they have been in this respect, it is well to remember now and for all time, that for a number of years we have been taught to believe, through the press and through channels more or less official, that the Japanese were fortifying the mandated islands in the Pacific, and that only in recent months, under pressure, was the Department of State required to state the facts, which were that they had no knoweldge of any fortifications of the mandated islands in the Pacific.

It seems to me we build too largely upon mere rumor in connection with military appropriations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, undoubtedly what the Senator says is true to a degree. In this particular instance I cannot help recalling that a year ago, when the same subject was under debate, we confronted precisely the same nebulous reply.

Mr. NYE. And from the same authorities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There was the same kind of rumor and gossip. We seem to have progressed no further in the course of the year in respect to the Japanese attitude. Technically, I assume that the fact that it is known that the British are building 42,000-ton ships justifies the Navy Department in considering that the requirements of the last authorization act have been met; but it is rather shocking to think that our naval rivalry is now with Great Britain instead of with Japan.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I again yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan, and also the Senator from North Dakota what, in their judgment, our Government should do to find out what sized battleships a foreign government is building. Do the Senators think we ought to send spies into foreign countries to spy out their business? Is there anything an honest government could do except what I understand our Government has done, and that is to ask a foreign government what it is doing? If that government refuses to tell what it is doing, then what would the Senator from Michigan or the Senator from North Dakota do in that regard? What further steps should be taken to find out what we want to know?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the word "spy" is a very invidious word. A question can be framed around the word "spy" to which no one cares to respond affirmatively. The fact remains that we have military attachés and naval attachés in every capital on earth. All other powers have similar attachés in the United States. I decline to believe that it is not possible, entirely within the ethics of the operation of consular attachés, to find out whether or not some other nation is building a 45,000-ton battleship.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NYE. Our doubting, continuing to wonder, and basing our actions upon rumors are a terrible reflection upon our own naval intelligence service and general service abroad, are they not?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems so to me.

Mr. President, I do not want my position misunderstood. Throughout the 11 or 12 years I have been in the Senate I have voted for every naval appropriation bill, regular and extra, with a single exception. I am not a small-navy man. I am a big-navy man. However, I am not for a Navy any bigger than it has to be in order adequately to provide for the national defense. I am not willing to lead in the building tempo, or to start the competition in building super-super battleships. There is no end to it. Nobody ever catches up. It is always a stern chase, and sooner or later we shall all be bankrupt, including the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. In the first place, I wish to say——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President if the Senator will yield just a moment, I should like to say something with reference to what the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from North Dakota have said.

I think it is absolutely true that unless the various countries in the world stop the mad race to build the largest battleship of all, they will all eventually be bankrupt. The entire world will be bankrupt. However, I cannot help remembering that we may have to go into bankruptcy in order to compete in the mad race. Japan is bankrupt, and has been for many years. Italy is bankrupt, and has been for many years. Germany is likewise bankrupt, and yet she is able, in her bankruptcy, to build more armament and battleships than she could when she was not bankrupt. We may find ourselves in the same condition before we are through.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know how the Senator defines bankruptcy; but, as I understand, all the great naval nations are bankrupt in the sense in which we ordinarily use that term. We have already reached that stage. We are spending more money than we can collect, and more money than we can reasonably obligate ourselves to pay. We cannot balance the Budget; we cannot pay our expenses in government; we cannot do anything but overdraw, issue new notes, go deeper and deeper into debt; and that is bankruptcy.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I sympathize with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Before coming to the Senate, in my service in the House I spent 12 years on the subcommittee having charge of naval appropriations. I remember that shortly after the World War, in 1919 or 1920, I offered an amendment to the naval appropriation bill calling upon the President to invite the naval powers of the world to a conference for the limitation of armaments. A point of order being raised, the amendment was eliminated. When the bill came to the Senate the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] offered a more comprehensive amendment to the naval bill seeking the same purpose, a conference for the limitation of armaments, which was agreed to by the Senate; and the House conferees agreed.

However, I am not closing my eyes to the situation which exists in the world. I have not discussed the policy to be followed by this country in naval matters, or our attitude with reference to the disturbed condition abroad, because, while I do not criticize others for doing so, I have thought that some of us could best promote the welfare of our country and help to preserve peace by refraining from talking about the affairs of European nations, and particularly about the tension existing in Europe.

Anyone who reads the hearings before the Appropriations Committees of the House upon the naval bill will find set forth a statement of treaties agreed to since last year. I know I was greatly interested in the statement. Reference is made to the Munich pact, and the pact concluded shortly thereafter, the Anglo-Italian nonaggression pact, and the nonaggression pact between France and Germany.

As I read of those pacts, I could not but think that if the people of those nations and the people of this Nation today had regard for the solemn pledges of governments, we should not have existing here and throughout the world the fear of war which exists. Notwithstanding those solemn pledges of nonaggression, we find the people of the world afraid that there will be aggression on the part of some one of the governments, parties to these solemn agreements.

So far as this Government is concerned, we must be frank and say that our attitude upon this bill is affected somewhat by the situation in the world. It is true that our naval program was entered upon as a result of the 1936 treaty, before conditions abroad became as tense as they now are. The program was determined upon by the General Board of the Navy as the program essential for the adequate defense of the United States; but the situation in Europe has caused this Government to accelerate its defense program.

I find that the language of the act of last year on the question which causes this discussion is slightly different from the statements contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Regardless of the statements contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, we must look to the law. The law says:

> (a) Capital ships, 105,000 tons, making a total authorized underage tonnage of 630,000 tons: Provided, That vessels of tonnages in excess of 35,000 tons each may be laid down if the President determines with respect to the tonnage of capital ships being built by other nations that the interests of national defense so require, in which event the authorized composition of the United States Navy of capital ships is hereby increased by 135,000 tons, making a total authorized underage tonnage of 660,000 tons.

Pursuant to the discretion vested in him under that law, the President, upon the information he had, determined that the interests of national defense required the approval of the construction of vessels of 45,000 tons. If I am asked what information the President had, I am unable to answer; but I can answer that according to the hearings and the positive testimony of the Navy Department, Great Britain now has the Hood, which is 42,100 tons, and in addition has under construction other ships of 42,000 tons. I put into the RECORD for the benefit of the Senate the table furnished by the Navy Department as to the tonnage of Japan.

Senators say that it ought to be easy to ascertain the exact tonnage of ships under construction by Japan. Those charged with the duty of conducting our naval intelligence give us the best information they have; and I shall not stop today to ask them the source of that information. I have confidence in the statement that they have given to the Congress of the United States. That statement shows that Japan now has under construction three ships of from 42,000 to 46,000 tons. The information that is referred to in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations is that 46,000 and not 42,000 is the tonnage of the last ship laid down by Japan.

What do we find as to speed? Everyone knows, because our Government has no secrets as to naval power, that the speed of our ships is much less than the speed of the ships of Japan or, for that matter, of Great Britain.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BYRNES. I will yield in a moment, after I finish the statement. The speed of most of our smaller battleships ranges from 21 to 22 knots per hour; those that we now have under construction will have a speed of 27 knots per hour; the proposed 45,000-ton battleship will be a faster ship. It must be, because Germany has two ships with a speed of 30 knots; Great Britain has the Repulse and the Renown with a speed of 31½ knots. These figures are taken from the best information obtainable by the Navy Department. I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am curious to know what is the record from which the Senator has been reading?

Mr. BYRNES. The record is simply the testimony before the House Appropriations Committee by the representatives of the Navy Department.

Mr. McNARY. Who was it who testified?

Mr. BYRNES. Admiral Leahy, who furnished a detailed statement of the naval construction of various governments.

Mr. McNARY. The able Senator from Michigan stated or read into the RECORD that Admiral Leahy said all he knew about it was from press reports. I am just curious to know where the Senator gets his so-called "definite information."

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know about the statement to which the Senator refers but the information is in the House hearings, and the matter was discussed and referred to in more than one place. The information was secured through the naval intelligence. Where they got the information, I am unable to say. I would not attempt to say except as to British ships, concerning which there is public knowledge.

Mr. McNARY. I am not referring to ships which are being built by Great Britain but those that are supposed to be under construction by Japan.

Mr. BYRNES. As I have said, as to those ships the only information comes through the naval intelligence.

Mr. McNARY. While I am on my feet, let me ask the Senators concerning the ships of 35,000 tons for which contracts have been made. What is the contract cost to the Government for those ships?

Mr. BYRNES. We went into the question of the contract cost at some length. For contract ships my recollection is the cost is eighty-four-million-and-some-hundred-thousand dollars.

Mr. McNARY. I am speaking of the 35,000-ton ships, the largest we now are building.

Mr. BYRNES. I am advised that the North Carolina and Washington of 35,000 tons each cost $65,000,000. The last one under construction will cost eighty-some million dollars.

Mr. McNARY. That is a 35,000-ton ship?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; a 35,000-ton ship.

Mr. McNARY. What will the 45,000-ton ship cost?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator will be interested to know that the estimate submitted was $93,000,000; but, taking into consideration some deductions which should be allowed, it would cost not to exceed $84,000,000. It was surprising to me that a 45,000-ton battleeship should not cost more than the 35,000-ton battleship under construction at this time.

Mr. McNARY. That presents a very curious situation. It is almost inconceivable that a 45,000-ton battleship costs no more than a 35,000-ton battleship.

Mr. BYRNES. So much so that the committee spent several hours inquiring as to the reasons. It is very difficult satisfactorily to explain the reason, but it comes about in this way: In the one case an estimate is secured for the construction of a ship under private contract, when, of course, there is a definite figure. In the other case the ship is constructed in Government yards, and when it comes to ascertaining the exact cost of the construction of a ship in a Government yard one is met with the information from the representatives of the Department that, not including the statistical costs, the construction will involve an expenditure of about $84,000,000. Then, when the question is asked, what are the "statistical costs" we are confronted with statements as to how much of the overhead should be apportioned to the construction of the ship in a Government yard. I cannot convey to the Senate the mental confusion encountered by the Senator from South Carolina as he endeavored to follow the representative of the Department through the "statistical" talk he made, but the impression made upon me finally was that there was a difference in cost of approximately $8,000,000 as between construction in a private yard and in a Government yard and that, even then, the figures could not be relied on at all, because it would be argued that the officers who are assigned to the yard in connection with construction work are on the pay roll in any event; that they would be used for other purposes, and that there could not be taken into consideration the comparable amount for taxes or for capital invested by the private builder. After some hours I think it was the unanimous decision of the subcommittee that we would surrender and agree that the 45,000-ton battleship would cost approximately $85,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. So that the net result is that a battleship of 35,000 tons costs just as much as a battleship of 45,000 tons?

Mr. BYRNES. That is the statement made to us, surprising as it may seem to the Senator from Oregon and surprising as it seems to me.

Mr. McNARY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BYRNES. I say it is as surprising to me as it is to the Senator from Oregon, but it is based on the expense now being incurred by the Department for the construction of ships, and it is their best estimate of cost 12 months from now, for it takes between 3 and 4 years to build one of these ships. I must say, adverting to the question at issue, that is another reason why the Government cannot delay if it is desired to construct 45,000-ton battleships in view of the information as to what is being done by other navies. The question is what condition will we be in 3 or 4 years from now in naval strength if we do not take steps to construct ships that will be comparable in speed, armament, and in protection with the ships of other nations.

Mr. McNARY. I think it may be conceded that a 45,000-ton ship would be larger and better than a smaller ship.

Mr. BYRNES. There is no question about that; particularly, it would be faster.

Mr. McNARY. I am so converted that I think we should build all battleships 45,000 tons.

Mr. BYRNES. I must say that it pleases my economical soul to learn that it costs no more for the construction of a 45,000-ton battleship than it does for the construction of a 35,000-ton battleship, particularly when I am told that the larger vessel will be faster and better. So I do not see any objection to implementing the Navy with the best weapon that can be afforded.

Mr. McNARY. I am free to say that I am a convert.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. I merely wish to make one observation relative to the statement made by the Senator that Germany had recently constructed battleships. The Senator will recall that those are what are called "pocket" battleships, of not more than perhaps from 10,000 to 15,000 tons.

Mr. BYRNES. I was referring only to the speed of those battleships.

Mr. KING. They are comparable to fast cruisers, but they are not at all comparable, so far as potentiality is concerned, with the 35,000-ton or the 45,000-ton battleship.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Michigan indicated a possible conflict between the authority cited by the Senator from South Carolina and the authority cited by the Senator from Michigan. As I understood, the Senator from South Carolina was talking about the speed of vessels, and the authority he cited went to the question of the speed of these vessels, whereas, as I understood, the Senator from Michigan was speaking about the tonnage of vessels, and his authority went to that point. So I do not think there is any conflict between the authorities cited by those Senators.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask to include in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a statement furnished by the Navy Department as to the Navy building program of Japan, so that those who are interested may see it; and also a comparative statement as to the ships in commission of the United States Navy, the British Navy, and the Japanese Navy.

There being no objection, the statements referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Number of combatant ships in full commission or fully manned on Jan. 1, 1939

Japan maintains a policy of extreme secrecy concerning her naval construction program. However, according to the best information available the following naval vessels are reported building or appropriated for:

Category	Number	Estimated total tonnage
Battleships (42,000 to 46,000 tons)	3	[1] 126,000
Aircraft carriers (about 10,000 tons each)	2	20,000

Mine sweepers (630 tons each estimated)	6	3,780
Repair ship	1	9,000
Total	40	234,040

[1] In addition the following ships are reported projected: 1 battleship, 5 destroyers, 3 submarines.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. It has been difficult to hear all the statements which have been made by Senators, and perhaps the Senator from South Carolina has covered the point concerning which I desire to ask. As I understand, we are proposing to lay down two 45,000-ton battleships and they are supposed to cost $83,500,000 each?

Mr. BYRNES. That is the estimated cost.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the complete cost of the 45,000-ton battleships?

Mr. BYRNES. That was the statement I made in response to the Senator from Oregon. I told him we had gone into it fully, and that was the very best estimate I could present. I find that the cost complete is $88,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. I was unable to hear what the Senator then said.

Mr. BYRNES. That is the best estimate we were able to obtain.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In that connection, the press has reported that the cost of one of these ships will be in excess of $93,000,000; and I wonder if that figure is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. I said that from the estimate of $93,000,000 there was a deduction which would bring the cost to approximately $88,000,000.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I should like to ask the Senator, if I am not interrupting the trend of his remarks, if we spend approximately $100,000,000 on such a battleship as is now proposed—and because of increased costs I think it will cost us $100,000,000 to build it—is it not a fact that we have to surround such a ship with auxiliary craft, which, in the aggregate will cost another $100,000,000, in order to save the battleship from being sunk in battle?

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no.

Mr. LUNDEEN. We have naval authority for that statestatement in our hearings. That would make the cost of one ship approximately $200,000,000 and for two ships approximately $400,000,000. Where are we going to stop in this "saving the world"? How far are we going in this direction? Naval authorities tell us that our present Navy is sufficient to protect not only the United States, it is sufficient to protect the Monroe Doctrine—the defense of the Western Hemisphere. That is enough. There let us stop.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently expert in naval strategy to determine whether or not it is necessary to surround an $88,000,000 battleship with $88,000,000 worth of tonnage in auxiliary ships. I yield to any information on that subject possessed by the Senator from Minnesota. I must say that I doubt the accuracy of the statement; but whatever the policy of the Government be, if the Navy, by direction of Congress, is forced to construct a battleship, the Appropriations Committee is interested only in appropriating the amount of money determined necessary to carry out the policy. So long as it is our policy to build these battleships, if it be necessary to have some auxiliaries they will have to be provided.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me at that point, the information I gave to the Senator is based on statements before our committees. I hope it is reliable.

In that connection, let me repeat the statement—and I have no intention of going into any long discussion—of Admiral Sims, the highest naval officer we had in the World War, and, in my opinion, the best naval officer we have had in some time. He said, "The best place for our battleships in the next world war will be as far up the Mississippi River as we can get them."

Mr. BYRNES. I hope the Senator will not press me on that subject, because I have had several debates on that question during the past 20 years, and I am not in accord with the views of the Senator in regard to Admiral Sims.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator may differ, but if I may be permitted, I should like to have the RECORD show that it has been reported that the admiral said that the safest place for these great ships in the next war will be as far up the Mississippi River as we can get them. In the presence of submarines the great ships of the world were locked up behind mine barriers during a greater part of the World War; they only sallied forth at intervals, and then rapidly moving and zigzagging back to their various bases. Now, with the huge bomber and its 2,000-pound bombs, huge ships of the surface are too slow. They are out of date; they must be protected by the air forces, and without adequate air force they are helpless and will be put out of commission.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I should not want to enter into a discussion about the statements of Admiral Sims. Senator GLASS and I were told by the admiral about a week before the armistice that the armistice had to be agreed to because of the fact that the American Army had fallen down in service of supplies, and that we were responsible for the failure. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and I at that time came over to testify before a Senate committee as to his statements. The admiral also expressed the view, in which he was very urgent and forceful, that the United States Government had no business having a merchant marine; that we ought to depend on Great Britain to furnish delivery wagons to carry our goods to market. I did not agree with the distinguished admiral. I still think we should not rely upon Great Britain to furnish our merchant marine; and I found out, in the case of the statement made by the admiral that the armistice had to be agreed to because of the failure of the service of supplies, that again his information was wrong. I regretted it, because it caused me to get up at 5 o'clock in the morning to go down to the headquarters of Service of Supplies in order to get the facts about this great "failure" on the part of the American Army; and when I got there, I found a letter from the front congratulating the Service of Supplies on the wonderful service they had performed. Consequently, I cannot accept the statements of the distinguished admiral, who doubtless rendered efficient service to the Navy but was not always accurate in his statements or sound in his views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, on page 41, beginning in line 25. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, did the Chair say "without objection, the amendment is agreed to"?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the statement of the Chair.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is objection. If the Chair wishes to submit the amendment, that is something else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] It appears to the Chair that the ayes have it. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 4, after the figures "$50,000", to insert "riggers and laborers shop building (to replace structure destroyed by fire on May 2, 1939), $150,000; two 15-ton shipbuilding cranes, $150,000", so as to read:

Navy Yard, Charleston, S. C.: Plate storage yard and pickling plant for new ship construction materials, $105,000; completion of shipbuilding facilities, $262,000; drydock crane, $135,000; improvement and rearrangement of existing shops, $123,000; labor-board building, $50,000; riggers and laborers shop building (to replace structure destroyed by fire on May 2, 1939), $150,000; two 15-ton shipbuilding cranes, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Aeronautics—Aviation, Navy", on page 46, line 9, after the numerals "1939", to strike out "for continuing the construction of a rigid airship as provided in the act approved May 17, 1938 (52 Stat. 401, 403), $500,000, and the appropriation of $500,000 on account of such airship, contained in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938, is hereby continued available until June 30, 1940; in all, $83,298,000", and in line 14, after the words "in all", to strike out "$83,298,000" and insert "$82,798,000", so as to read:

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1939, $1,500,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, fleet air bases, fleet and all other aviation activities, accident prevention, testing laboratories, overhauling of planes, technical periodicals, and the purchase for aviation purposes only of special clothing, wearing apparel, and special equipment, $24,900,000, including not to exceed $50,000 for the procurement of helium, which sum of $50,000 shall be transferred to and made available to the Bureau of Mines on July 1, 1939, in addition to which sum the Bureau of Mines may use for helium-plant operation in the fiscal year 1940 the unexpended balance of funds transferred to it for such operation in the fiscal year 1939, and the Bureau may lease, after competition, surplus metal cylinders acquired for use as helium containers; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, including the payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed and payment of the travel expenses of such persons if they be members of the Naval Reserve ordered to active duty, $9,500,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, spare parts and accessories, $46,898,000, of which amount not to exceed $15,000,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization carried in the Navy Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1939; in all, $82,798,000, and the money herein specifically appropriated for "aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Marine Corps—General expenses, Marine Corps," on page 52, line 7, after the word "year", to strike out "$588,500" and insert "$690,000", so as to read:

For repairs and improvements to barracks, quarters, and other public buildings at posts and stations; for the renting, leasing, and improvement of buildings in the District of Columbia, and at such other places as the public exigencies require, and the erection of temporary buildings upon the approval of the Secretary of the Navy at a total cost of not to exceed $10,000 during the year, $690,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 16, to insert:

Expenses, Marine Band, United Confederate Veterans' Reunion, Trinidad, Colo., and national encampment, Grand Army of the Republic, Pittsburgh, Pa.: For expenses of the United States Marine Band in attending the United Confederate Veterans' 1939 Reunion at Trinidad, Colo., August 22 to 25, 1939, and in attending the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, Pittsburgh, Pa., August 27 to September 1, 1939, as authorized by the acts approved April 20, 1939, and April 24, 1939, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 3, after the words "In all", to strike out "$9,117,755" and insert "$9,232,255", and in line 9, to strike out "$85,000" and insert "$115,000", so as to read:

In all, $9,232,255, to be accounted for as one fund: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $155,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Replacement of naval vessels", on page 56, line 8, before the words "to remain", to strike out "$46,611,000" and insert "$46,011,000", so as to read:

Armor, armament, and ammunition: Toward the armor, armament, and ammunition for vessels hereinbefore described under the head of "Construction and machinery", $46,011,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Navy Department—Salaries", on page 60, at the end of line 2, to increase the appropriation under the office of Judge Advocate General, from $125,000 to $126,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, at the end of line 8, to increase the appropriation for salaries under the Hydrographic Office from $415,000 to $417,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 20, after the word "of", to strike out the word "additional", and in line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$89,400", so as to read:

Bureau of Aeronautics, $360,400: Provided, That the services of technical and clerical personnel may be employed only in the Bureau of Aeronautics in connection with the design and construction of aircraft, to be paid from the appropriation "Aviation, Navy, 1940": Provided further, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year 1940 shall not exceed $89,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina a question? I suppose the bill does not contain any provision regarding the improvement of Guam?

Mr. BYRNES. No; it does not.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is no authorization on the subject in the bill now, as I understand.

Mr. BYRNES. There is nothing on the subject in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Perhaps this is not the appropriate point in the bill; but what is the aggregate amount carried in the bill for the Bureau of Aeronautics, and particularly for the construction of airplanes?

Mr. BYRNES. Eighty-eight million and some-hundred-thousand dollars, which is the amount recommended by the Budget Bureau. The total amount was provided, except about $500,000, which was authorized by contract instead of the cash being appropriated. The full amount recommended by the Budget Bureau is carried in the bill.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that the testimony before his committee justified this large appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes, Mr. President. The Congress heretofore, by its action, has established a program. This bill provides for carrying out only a small part of the program. If the Congress is wrong, it may reverse the program and save a great deal of money. If it does not do so, we have to make this appropriation and we shall have to appropriate next year a larger sum. The bill appropriates for about 500 new planes this year. The program has been fixed at 3,000, as the Senator knows, because he is on that committee. Therefore, we will have to make additional appropriations next year for this purpose.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the larger part of the expenditure will be incurred in the construction by the Government of airplane factories or facilities, or whether the larger part will be expended in the acquisition of planes manufactured by private corporations?

Mr. BYRNES. Much the larger part is for the acquisition of planes manufactured by private corporations. There is in the bill an appropriation for the enlargement and expansion of the Government manufacturing plant at Philadelphia, but we have no plant in which we can manufacture all the planes provided in this program.

Mr. KING. Did the evidence show that there is competition among private manufacturers of airplanes?

Mr. BYRNES. The evidence is that there is very keen competition among the manufacturers of planes, and as the Senator knows, there is a limitation upon profits. I know the hearings will be very interesting to the Senator on the question of what is being done to check up on the question of profits. The Senate committee went into that question at some length to determine how actively the departments were seeking information on the subject, and I must say, to the comforting assurance of the Senator from South Carolina, that there has been a check-up which resulted in the payment to the Treasury of a considerable sum in a number of instances. The profits were in excess of those authorized by the Vinson-Trammell Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 1, after the name "Navy Department", to strike out "$4,159,039" and insert "$4,162,659", so as to read:

In all salaries, Navy Department, $4,162,659.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the Senate committee included in the bill prohibitory language in the matter of the importation of foreign canned foods, beefs, and so forth?

Mr. BYRNES. On page 27, language of that kind is in the bill, placed there by the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the provision on page 27 does not prohibit the importation of such products. The provision is that the Navy shall not purchase articles of food produced elsewhere than in the United States or its possessions, unless they cannot be produced here in sufficient quantities, and so forth.

Mr. McNARY. It was my intention to limit my statement to the operation of this bill, of course.

Mr. CONNALLY. The language does operate in that way in the case of the Navy.

Mr. McNARY. I am merely making the inquiry. That, apparently, is language which was inserted by the House.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Was an effort made before the Senate committee to modify that language?

Mr. BYRNES. Such an effort was made.

Mr. McNARY. What was the result of the effort?

Mr. BYRNES. The Appropriations Committee, by a vote of 9 to 7, recommended the retention of the language as it appears in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if this is the appropriate time, I desire to move to recommit the bill, with instructions to reduce by 10 percent the aggregate amount carried by it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is in order.

Mr. KING. Then I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to reduce by 10 percent the aggregate amount carried by the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Utah if that motion does not conflict with the resolution which he has pending on the desk.

Mr. KING. No; the resolution which I have pending, which lies on the table—I have not sought to call it up because I am inclined to think it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations—asks for an aggregate reduction of 10 percent.

Mr. McNARY. But the resolution would apply to all appropriation bills.

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. It would become applicable at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. This motion, standing by itself, of course, is in spirit rather in conflict with the Senator's resolution.

Mr. KING. I do not quite agree with the Senator. If we cannot get all—and I do not expect to get all asked for in the resolution—I hope to obtain a reduction in this particular bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I wonder if the Senator from Utah understands what the Senator from Oregon has in mind. The Senator from Utah has submitted a resolution, which I think approaches the subject in the only way in which it should be approached; namely, that it should be offered as an amendment to the deficiency bill when all of the annual supply bills shall have been passed.

If the motion the Senator from Utah has now proposed should be adopted, a motion for a 10-percent reduction in the pending bill, and then the Senator's resolution now on the desk, providing for a 10-percent reduction in all bills hereafter, should be agreed to, there would be a 20-percent reduction in the items in the pending bill, and a 10-percent reduction in the other bills. It might militate against favorable action on the Senator's resolution, when he offers it, providing for a 10-percent reduction in all appropriation bills, outside of the fixed charges.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had that in mind, and if the motion which I have now offered shall prevail, and the resolution lying upon the table comes up for consideration, I shall be constrained to except from the resolution the provisions of the pending bill.

I am a realist, and I doubt whether, with the temper of the Congress, with its determination to spend more and more, there will be much chance of securing the adoption of the resolution which I offered several days ago, and which is lying upon the table. I had hoped, by presenting the motion with regard to the pending bill, to attract some little attention to the importance of economy in appropriations this year, and I had thought that if we secured a reduction of 10 percent in the items in the pending bill, it would be a powerful argument in favor of the adoption of the resolution which is lying upon the table, which I would modify for the purpose of excepting from its operations the provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I never like to suggest to a Senator not to urge a motion, but I suggest to the Senator from Utah, from my experience with this subject, that the resolution which he has on the table will have much greater support than will a motion as to any one bill. I presume the Senator has considered whether or not he will hurt his resolution by the pending proposal. I shall vote against the Senator's motion in respect to the pending bill, but when any Senator offers such a motion to a deficiency bill, after the other appropriation bills have been passed, and eliminates fixed charges——

Mr. KING. As my resolution does.

Mr. BYRNES. And one other thing, which, from investigation in a former Congress, I think ought to be excluded, I will vote for it. That being my attitude, I merely suggest to the Senator whether it is wise to put Members of the Senate who are in sympathy with a cut in appropriations applying to all bills on record as voting against his motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has been very fair in his discussion of the motion which I have submitted, as well as the resolution which I offered a few days ago which is lying upon the table for such action as may be taken with respect to it. I think, however, that if he is favorable to the resolution he should not oppose the motion which I have just submitted to reduce the pending bill 10 percent in the aggregate amount called for. In other words, if a resolution dealing with all appropriation bills and calling for a reduction in their total amount of 10 percent is meritorious, then a motion to reduce an appropriation bill which would be included in the resolution should receive support.

I have listened with interest to the observations made respecting the provisions in the pending bill. I am not satisfied with many of its provisions. I think the appropriation of more than $700,000,000 is not justified in the light of present conditions. This is not the only appropriation bill for the Navy which this Congress has passed and will be requested to pass. In other words, additional appropriations aggregating perhaps several hundred million dollars will be enacted into law during this session of Congress. There is every indication that the appropriations for so-called national defense which will be made during this session of Congress will exceed the stupendous sum of $2,000,000,000. Indeed, from requests which are being submitted to Congress, it is quite likely the appropriations for the Army and for the Navy which will be made by this Congress will approximate two and one-half billion dollars.

Not only are the appropriations for the Army and the Navy greatly in excess of what the situation warrants, but from every quarter and in respect to every subject which the National Government deals with, the demands for increased appropriations have never been exceeded in any period of our Nation's history except during the World War. I believe that before Congress adjourns it will have appropriated at least $10,000,000,000 and made commitments calling for an additional three or four billion dollars. More and more the Federal Government is intruding itself into fields which under our form of government should be occupied by the States, their political subdivisions, and by individuals. Instead of retrenchment and reforms in the Federal Government, there is an unwarranted expansion and a multiplication of bureaus and Federal agencies.

There has been a legitimate demand for a reorganization of the Government which would result in economies and in greater efficiency. I think that a fair and impartial investigation of the activities of the Government, of its bureaus, agencies, and expenditures, will furnish convincing proof that there has been waste and inefficiency in many Federal departments and agencies. The personnel of the Government is entirely too large. The number of Federal agencies should be materially reduced, and the extension of Federal activities into areas which it is not authorized under the Constitution to enter should be interdicted. Congress has been too generous; indeed, too extravagant in its appropriations, and I fear has not limited them to the needs of the Government and in behalf of those purposes which fall within the purview and authority of the National Government. In my opinion the unwise and improper expenditures of the Federal Government and its unwarranted activities in many fields of private endeavor are largely responsible for the prolonged depression and for the unsatisfactory condition in our economic, industrial, and, for that matter, our political life.

It cannot be denied that the national economy is in a most unsatisfactory condition; nor can it be denied that such condition has been aggravated and accentuated because of unwise policies pursued by the Government, including its invasion of the fields of private endeavor and its impingement upon the States and the rights of individuals.

In my opinion, if appropriations were reduced, thereby evidencing the fact that the burden of taxation would be lightened, a long step would be taken toward economic and business recovery; and if, in addition, there was conclusive evidence that the causes which have contributed so much to the depression would be removed, there would be a revival in every field of business and the clouds which overhang our economic and industrial life would be removed.

As I have indicated, there is fear among the people arising largely from the uncertainty of policies of the Government. There have been, and still are, manifestations of a purpose upon the part of some to so weaken the capitalistic system, and so interfere with individual and States' rights, as to develop a situation which would be regarded as an excuse for further interposition by the Federal Government into private affairs, and the control by it of activities entirely beyond the functions of the Federal Government.

The situation does not warrant wishful thinking, but, indeed, it demands a realistic approach to economic and industrial conditions. That approach is not through the Federal Government but through the efforts of individuals, local communities, and States. In other words, the menace of State socialism must be removed and the confidence of the people renewed to the extent that they will earnestly and patriotically address themselves to the rectification of conditions which have been so depressing and which, if continued, will further add to the economic ills of our country.

Mr. President, I am in favor of appropriations to meet all reasonable and proper demands of the Federal Government. I am not in favor of appropriations which I believe to be excessive, improper, and which project the Federal Government into activities beyond its jurisdiction.

In seeking a reduction in the present bill, I am not unmindful of world conditions. I am willing to support appropriations for needed national defense, but I do not believe that under the cry of national defense we should be swept off our feet or become hysterical or adopt policies which will add to the burdens of the people and directly or indirectly affect the attitude of other nations toward this Republic. The people throughout the world understand that this Republic has large resources; that it is in many ways the most powerful nation in the world. It is in a position to lead the way to the reduction of military armaments. It is in a position to temper conditions throughout the world which increase the possibilities of international conflicts.

Much is being said about "moral rearmament." Our Nation is in a position to carry forward that great movement which the words "moral rearmament" signify. Those words have connotations that are being recognized by millions of people throughout the world. I repeat, notwithstanding the confusion in the world and the fear of war and the preparations for war, it is an opportune time to speak for peace and to raise the banner for limitation of armament and for "moral rearmament."

Reference has just been made by Senators to the importance of battleships, and it has been argued that we must construct at least two battleships with a tonnage of 45,000 tons each.

The view seems to prevail that if some nation constructs new battleships, our Government must build battleships of the same tonnage or even larger. The illusion prevails in many quarters that the day will come when competition will cease as a result of the operation of military competitive forces. That has not been the history of armaments and war preparations. If one nation builds fortifications, other nations spend as large and, if possible, larger sums for similar purposes; and if a nation builds a 20,000-ton battleship other nations will feel constrained to build naval vessels as large or indeed of greater tonnage. Competition does not restrain war preparations but invites larger appropriations and greater activity along the fields of military activities.

Sir Phillip Kerr, the great English statesman, who became Lord Lothian, and who will soon be with us as British Ambassador, stated:

> So long as war is tolerated as a method of settling international disputes, armaments are inevitable. * * * But armaments inevitably produce war. They may give security, but only at the price of war. Armaments, of course, are justified on the ground that they are merely legitimate instruments of national security, but no nation can make itself secure by armaments, except by having armaments which will give it victory in the event of war; that is, by making its neighbors insecure. Hence the perpetual repetition throughout history of competition in armaments, ending in periodic wars.

Undoubtedly Lord Lothian was correct. Many years ago, when it was announced that the United States intended to build larger battleships, Japan immediately, through fear or for some other reason, announced a program calling for six large battleships. Fortunately, that program which our Government contemplated and which provoked Japan's program for six huge battleships was arrested by the limitation of arms conference called by our Government.

There is justification for the view that battleships do not always determine naval conflicts. The submarines have introduced a powerful weapon, offensive and defensive, in naval warfare.

Several years ago, when I was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, I contended that a Bureau of Aeronautics and a Bureau of Submarines should be established, believing that the lessons of the World War demonstrated the vulnerability of battleships and the importance of submarines and airplanes in naval contests. I recall that some of the officials of the Navy Department opposed the resolution; they seemed to be wedded to the battleships and were not impressed with the importance of submarines and the airplanes. I recall that in the discussions before the committee reference was made to the naval battle between the British Grand Fleet and the German Fleet under Admiral Scheer. I think it is conceded that the German Fleet was victorious in that conquest. Certain it is that when the Grand Fleet discovered the presence of submarines it hastily departed from the field of action in the North Sea and sought refuge at Scapa Flow. I mention this merely for the purpose of indicating that the battleship, important though it may be, is not all controlling or all compelling.

I did not arise to discuss the relative merits of the ships in the various categories of the Navy. I am, however, earnestly appealing for a reasonable and, as I believe, realistic approach to this question of naval defense, or, if you will, naval preparation. Personally I do not perceive that the United States is in danger of attack from any single power or any group of nations. I have upon other occasions stated that the position of the United States was impregnable to any and all attacks from any one nation or any combination of nations.

I am concerned about our economic situation and have opposed some appropriations which have been made by the Federal Government, believing that they were impediments to economic rehabilitation. I believe we should reduce expenses, lift from the people the apprehensions of which they are possessed, caused by what they believe to be unwise and unsound governmental policies. We need economic and industrial rehabilitation and that will come not by enormous and profligate expenditures, not by huge deficits, not by reason of fiscal and other policies upon the part of the Government that are regarded by many as unsound and unwise, and which constitute deterrents to individual efforts, but by a revival of confidence, a removal of the fears and apprehensions in the minds of the people, by business expansion, and by a general attack on all fronts upon the depression through which we have passed and which is still with us.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, there was recently passed a naval authorization bill providing for a number of naval air bases throughout the country. In the debate on that item, and discussing, among other sites, one which is ultimately supposed to be located at Corpus Christi, Tex., I asked the junior Senator from Rhode Island a question about a location in his State at Quonset Point.

I wish to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether he has any information on the matter I am about to mention. The acquisition of this site was to be dependent upon the State of Rhode Island conveying to the Federal Government what is called a National Guard camp at that point; but there was contemplated also the purchase of additional land. Has the Senator any information to the effect that the adjutant general of Rhode Island, anticipating that the Government will purchase this site, has made private purchases on his own account, with a view to making a profit out of the supposed location of this particular aviation base on the old National Guard property?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, replying to the question of the Senator from Texas, I may say that I have not sufficient information satisfactorily to reply to him. I know that the adjutant general of Rhode Island was helpful in getting the State of Rhode Island to deed the land to the Federal Government for the purpose described. If the adjutant general bought land recently I should be very much surprised to find that it was done with any unworthy purpose. I shall, however, be glad to look into the matter.

I appreciate the interest of the Senator from Texas. I remember the last time the matter came on the floor of the Senate the Senator from Texas, mindful of the fact that he represents the largest State in the Union, and that I represent the smallest, asked me whether, if this land were deeded to the Federal Government, there would be any land left in Rhode Island. I remember replying that, though there might not be sufficient land left, there would be left sufficient water to justify the perpetuation of Rhode Island as the oldest sovereign State in the Western Hemisphere.

Mindful of that honor, I shall be glad to look into the matter, but I think that neither the Senator from Texas, nor I, nor any other Senator, need worry about it, because the Navy Department, I feel sure, will not pay any more for any land than is justified, in view of the fact that it has power of condemnation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, my reason for inquiring was that the pending bill carries an appropriation for the purchase of the land in question, and if there exists any information that things such as those alleged are taking place, there ought to be some investigation by the Navy Department. An adjutant general who is in touch with the fact that the old National Guard camp is going to be deeded to the Government, who has the inside information, ought not to be permitted to profit thereby by making a private purchase and then unloading the land on the Government of the United States.

Mr. GREEN. I agree with the Senator from Texas. I suggest the best way to handle the matter is to let the item be adopted, and then see that no profit is made on such land if such a transaction as that alleged has taken place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to recommit the bill with instructions.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it seems to me we should have a record vote on the Navy appropriation bill. The bill provides for the largest appropriation ever made in peacetime for naval purposes. I think a number of Senators would like to vote against the bill.

Mr. President, it seems to me the money which will be spent for constructing the large battleships which are being authorized is a useless waste of money, especially in these hard times, when we are trying to save as much money as possible, and get closer to balancing the Budget.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I wish to say that I will join the Senator in asking for a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. FRAZIER. I shall be glad to have it.

Furthermore, new bombs are being perfected at the present time. I think all Senators remember reading reports in the newspapers of German bombs being dropped from airplanes upon certain cities in Spain last winter. The claim was made that persons a quarter of a mile away from where a bomb fell were killed. The bombs were supposed to have contained liquid oxygen. Such bombs are also being developed in the United States. The claim is made that some of the large mining companies now use liquid oxygen bombs, and with such a bomb can blow away the whole side of a mountain. It is further stated that there is no question that the biggest battleship afloat, even of 45,000 tons, could be disabled, if not sunk, by one of these liquid oxygen bombs, if the bomb fell near it. So it would seem to me that some of these appropriations at least are absolutely useless, and a total loss, especially in times when we need so much money to take care of those who are unemployed, those who for one reason or another cannot take care of themselves under present conditions.

Mr. President, we are appropriating at this time $773,000,000, which is $149,000,000 above the appropriation for the Navy last year, and last year's appropriation was the largest we had in peacetime for the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Davis	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard
Bailey	Frazier	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	George	Lucas	Slattery
Barkley	Gerry	Lundeen	Smathers

Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wiley
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman
Danaher	King	Russell

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and therefore withhold my vote. I am informed that if the Senator from Virginia were present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when Mr. RADCLIFFE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is absent on Government business. He is unable to obtain a pair, but I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCNARY (after having voted in the affirmative). I recall that I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I have voted. I therefore permit my vote to stand.

Mr. HILL. My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on important public business. If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness in his family.

I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent on official business for the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] are detained on official business.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is detained in a committee meeting. If present, he would vote "nay."

I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

I am not advised how these Senators would vote. They are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—61

Andrews	Ellender	Logan	Schwellenbach

So the bill H. R. 6149 was passed.

NAVAL AIR BASE IN RHODE ISLAND

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] this afternoon called attention to rumors or evidence which had been brought to his attention seeming to indicate that an official in Rhode Island had taken options upon land which the United States Navy might need or might purchase in view of a bill which was passed authorizing the location of a naval air base at Narragansett Bay.

I wish to say that I personally feel obligated, in view of what has been said by the Senator from Texas, to have the Navy Department investigate the matter; and if they fail to do so, the Committee on Naval Affairs will investigate it thoroughly, for I shall not permit any graft or any manipulation or any land deals by private individuals in connection with locations of naval air bases or any other property in which the Navy is interested.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN MARKET FOR AMERICAN PRODUCERS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the measure which has just received the approval of this body contains a provision which I regard as probably one of the most significant enactments at this session of Congress. I refer to the amendment to the appropriation bill which was offered in the House by Representative SCRUGHAM, requiring that when the funds appropriated in the bill are expended for the purchase of food products, they shall be expended for the purchase of products which are produced in the United States or its possessions. This amendment, drafted by Representative SCRUGHAM and myself, is a recognition of a feeling which is growing in this country, that the domestic market should be preserved for the American farmer and the American rancher.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say to Senators that as soon as this discussion shall have ended, it is my purpose to move that the calendar be called, so that Senators may remain here, if they are interested in the calendar, without having to be called back.

SENTIMENT STRONG FOR PROTECTING DOMESTIC GROWERS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me say, Mr. President, it is not my intention to occupy a great deal of time, and I shall be very happy to get out of the way of the calendar so soon as it is possible to do so. However, I wish to call to the attention of the Members of this body the significance of the growing sentiment among the people of the United States that the farm products which are produced in such abundance in the United States should be consumed here without dangerous competition from other countries.

The amendment to which I refer was adopted by the House without discussion; it has been adopted upon the floor of the Senate without discussion, though every Member of the body knew exactly what was proposed to be done, though the matter had been discussed far and wide from one end of the country to the other in the newspapers, and had been discussed in the Senate Committee on Appropriations as the result of evidence presented by Admiral Spear of the Navy Department, and by myself.

The question of Argentine beef, however small though it may have been so far as the Navy is concerned, is only one phase of the question of agricultural products and their use in the United States. This afternoon, for just a moment, I desire to call the attention of the body to another commodity, namely, sugar, the market for which in this country is the greatest market in the world; in fact, practically the only world market in which profits may be obtained.

UNITED STATES CONSUMES MORE SUGAR THAN IT PRODUCES

The United States and its possessions do not produce all the sugar consumed in the United States, particularly when one disregards the production of the Philippines which are now in the process of obtaining their freedom. Several years ago it was the practice of the people of the United States, through their representatives in Congress, to try to build up the local sugar industry by raising the tariff wall, particularly against Cuba, and, though the tariff wall was raised higher and higher and higher sugar continued to come in.

Then the tariff-free sugar produced in the Philippine Islands also began to flood the American market. Our own producers in continental United States, in Hawaii, and in Puerto Rico, have never been able to produce all the sugar that our people purchase and consume. So the tariff was lowered and we undertook to establish a quota system, by which the consumption requirements of continental United States were to be allocated among the various sugar-producing areas.

Those areas, briefly, are the beet-sugar area in continental United States, the cane-sugar area in Florida, the cane-sugar area in Louisiana, the cane-sugar area in Hawaii and in Puerto Rico, and then, upon the other side, the Philippines, Cuba, and certain other small nations which produce only a very infinitesimal amount of the entire importations into the United States.

QUOTA SYSTEM BETTER THAN TARIFF

The quota system was more successful than the tariff system because it definitely fixed the amount of sugar that could be imported into the United States. A quota was placed upon domestic production and also upon foreign production. Sugar, unlike many other agricultural products, however, is a deficit crop; we do not produce sufficient of it. All the other crops which give us so much concern and require so much attention are surplus crops, and we have been trying one expedient after another in the effort to dispose of those surplus crops abroad.

Only a few days ago the Senate was considering a proposal to subsidize the exportation of cotton, for example, although it was definitely indicated by the testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee in the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill that American families, some 9,000,000 in number, who receive an annual income of less than $1,500 each, would be able to double the consumption of cotton, as they would be able to double the consumption of wheat and other agricultural crops, if their purchasing capacity were raised.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Missouri in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. Then does the Senator believe that we should guarantee the American market to the American farmer at American price levels?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That suggestion has a very favorable sound to my ear, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LEE. The only market of which we can be absolutely assured is the American market. Is not that true?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. LEE. Then, in writing legislation in the effort to solve farm problems, that is the only market we can consider. Therefore, it seems to me that the Senator is striking a note today that is essential for us to keep in mind if we are ever to solve the farm problem. We should keep in mind the only market of which we are assured, and should deal with that market for the American farmer in such manner as to guarantee him his fair share of it at a price level commensurate with the price levels in America generally.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have not the slightest doubt that the supreme obligation of statesmanship in the United States today is to provide the means whereby the American market can be reserved to the American farmer. The question of how that guaranty may be made effective is altogether a different question from the one which I propose to discuss this afternoon.

Mr. LEE. That may be so, but the fundamental principle just announced by the Senator is one in which I heartily concur. Following that thought, we cannot allot to the American farmer his share of the American market if we allow to be shipped into this country farm products of which we already have a surplus. I have in mind cattle, not only in cans but on the hoof; I have in mind corn that is shipped into this country in the raw form; I have in mind some 266,000 bales of cotton that are shipped into this country, when we are trying to dispose of a surplus, under the thin guise of an argument that a certain staple or length is needed in order to manufacture certain types of goods. I subscribe to the thought offered by the Senator, and I hope other Senators will join with us in the effort to guarantee the American market to the American farmer at a price level on which he may live.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. There is no disagreement between the Senator from Wyoming and myself, especially as to what he said about the beef and cattle situation; but I cannot sit here, Mr. President, and hear words uttered on the floor of the United States Senate which would apparently attribute the present distressed agricultural situation of this country entirely to the importations of foreign agricultural commodities, for, with the permission of the Senator from Wyoming, I should like to say that farm commodities which have been imported into the country and which have been referred to here have little to do with the present distressed situation of agriculture.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from New Mexico to get into a debate about the responsibility, and the placing of the responsibility. I am not particularly concerned about fixing responsibility for any of the ills from which we are suffering. All I know is that we are suffering from these ills, and I am seeking to cure them.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. LEE. But the fact still remains, does it not, that we have an importation into this country every year of corn, cattle, and cotton? Is not that true?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no question about the correctness of the facts as stated by the Senator.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ANDREWS. In reply to the Senator from New Mexico, I should like to say that the present plan for the importation of sugar into the United States has practically ruined southern Florida. We cannot do anything. We have there a great area which has been developed for raising sugarcane, and we are not allowed to use it; but the Government is willing to send $400,000 a year down there to pay us not to use it. We do not want it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator from New Mexico merely means that this problem is a great deal broader than the importation of some agricultural products.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming will yield, I beg his pardon for interrupting his discourse.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am always happy to yield to the Senator from New Mexico, because the Senator always makes a contribution.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator. I want to say, however, that I am very, very sorry to learn of the distressed, poverty-stricken conditions in southern Florida.

SUGAR POLICY MUST BE CHANGED

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, my purpose in drawing attention to the amendment contained in the Navy bill, and to these other circumstances which have aroused the interest of Senators, was to submit to the Secretary of Agriculture—wise, able, frank citizen that he is, great public servant as I regard him to be—consideration of the fact that the practically unanimous support—indeed, the unanimous support, so far as the House and Senate in their formal sessions are concerned—which was given to this proposal is an indication that the policy with respect to sugar should be changed.

SENATE UNANIMOUSLY APPROVED NEW SUGAR BILL

On the 23d of March this body passed an amendment to the Sugar Act, and that measure went to the House. There can be no question about the fact that the measure was hastily passed in this body. The original bill was introduced by the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], was considered in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and was favorably reported out on the floor of the Senate before the Secretary of Agriculture had made a report upon the bill. It dealt only with one phase of the problem, namely, the plantings of sugarcane in the State of Louisiana in excess of the allotments to that State, which, unless the bill had been passed, would have had to be plowed up.

There can be no question that the sentiment of the people of America is absolutely against plowing up agricultural crops. We must find another way to solve this problem; but the bill was before the Senate. Members from many other States are interested in the production of sugar beets. The Senators from Florida and Louisiana were interested in the production of sugarcane there. Certain Members of this body are interested in Hawaii and Puerto Rico because one of them is a Territory and the other a possession of the United States to which we certainly owe a moral obligation.

So, upon the floor of the Senate amendments were offered and unanimously adopted to that bill by Senators ADAMS, NORRIS, WHEELER, and myself in the belief that when the bill reached the House of Representatives it would be given consideration by the great Committee on Agriculture of that body, the chairman of which is the very distinguished Representative MARVIN JONES, of Texas, whose name was attached to the first sugar bill passed in 1934, the Jones-Costigan Act.

ACTION THIS SESSION IMPERATIVE

The original bill at this session was considered in the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Jones-Costigan Act and the Sugar Act of 1937 were considered in the Committee on Finance, because in each instance the bill dealt with a problem of taxation; but the bill to which our amendments were attached had been considered in the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. So, instead of having it returned to the Committee on Finance, it was our belief and our hope that the Committee on Agriculture in the House, which had been thoroughly familiar with the problem, would give friendly consideration to the proposal, and then promptly bring to the floor of the House a measure which would take into consideration the needs of all the sugar-producing areas.

This demand for action arose from the fact that somehow or other, for some reason or other, in the administration of the Sugar Act the returns to the producer had been constantly going down; and when prices to the domestic producers were going down they were also going down to the producer of Cuban sugar. I have no question at all in my mind that the economy of Cuba would be immeasurably improved by the enactment of at least one portion of the bill as it passed the Senate, which had to do with the manner in which the consumption requirements and the quotas were to be established.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I do not want to interrupt or divert the Senator from his discussion of the sugar question; but when he rose he discussed briefly the provision of the bill which has just been passed dealing with canned corned beef. I wonder if this would be an opportune time for him to permit me to present a resolution which I should like to have read dealing with that subject. I should like to have his views upon it.

As I have studied that question, I have come to two conclusions:

First, that leaving aside now the question whether or not it is good policy to import canned corned beef—and on that subject my views are in accord with those of the Senator from Wyoming—we are at the mercy of the packers. They have a grip on the situation; and, since prices have advanced so rapidly, we ought to find some way of dealing with the situation, or, at least, studying it.

The second difficulty which presented itself to me is the fact that the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, and the C. C. C. buy meat products in such large quantities that we have to go to the great domestic packers to supply them. The resolution which I am presenting provides, first, that a study shall be made by all the departments of the Government which buy meat products—and we buy millions of pounds of them; the Navy alone purchases 600,000 pounds—first to see if some of the independent packers all over this country who make sausage and other canned meat foods would go into the business of making canned corned beef, and whether the necessary supply could be obtained by dealing with a large number of independent producers; and secondly, to report at the next session of the Congress on the feasibility of some Government agency itself supplying these meat products.

Those are the two points in the resolution which I submit, and which I ask unanimous consent to have read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Massachusetts for the purpose of having the resolution read?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very happy to yield for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. The resolution will certainly have the effect of letting it be known that Congress is not going to allow the packers to continue to increase prices; that Congress is going to find some means of doing business with other people, the small independent producers, or, as a final step, that we ourselves will go into the business in competition with the great packers rather than pay these high prices.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is my understanding that the Senator is not asking for action upon the resolution at this time.

Mr. WALSH. No; simply that it be read.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator merely asks that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 134) was read and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

Whereas meat and meat products purchased for consumption by the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Civilian Conservation Corps, and Coast Guard represent expenditures of millions of dollars; and

Whereas such meat and meat products are purchased pursuant to requests for large quantity bids; and

Whereas several million pounds of meat products are purchased annually by the Government and between five and six hundred thousand pounds of canned corned beef are consumed annually by the Navy alone; and

Whereas the cost of canned corned beef purchased pursuant to bids submitted by domestic packers has increased since 1932 from 11.6 cents to 23.6 cents; and

Whereas the most recent bids submitted by domestic packers on canned corned beef vary from approximately 24 cents to 29 cents: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Agriculture are each requested to appoint two members of a committee, to consist of two officers in the Army, two officers in the Navy, two officers in the Coast Guard, and two employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, to make a study and investigation of the methods and means used in purchasing meat and meat products for consumption by the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Civilian Conservation Corps, and Coast Guard, with a view to (1) providing that such purchases shall be made in smaller quantities, in order to permit small independent packers to submit bids, and (2) determining the feasibility of the Government operating packing plants to supply meat and meat products to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Civilian Conservation Corps, and Coast Guard. It is requested that the members of such committee be appointed as soon as practicable and that such committee transmit to the Senate not later than January 3, 1940, a report of its findings and recommendations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be submitted first to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and, of course, after it is considered by that committee, I shall request that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and then to the Committee on Commerce.

QUOTES STATEMENT ON CANNED BEEF

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD following the reading of the resolution presented by the Senator from Massachusetts my statement of yesterday before the Committee on Appropriations on this subject.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF WYOMING

PURCHASE OF ARGENTINE CANNED CORNED BEEF

Senator O'MAHONEY. Mr. Chairman, this question arose as long ago as February 14, when, having learned that the Navy Department was considering a bid from Argentina, I wrote a letter to Admiral Conard, Paymaster General of the Navy, calling attention to the situation.

Let me read the letter:

"DEAR SIR: Recent publication of press dispatches indicating that the Navy Department has under consideration the award of a contract for corned beef to an Argentine packers' group has raised a storm of protest from my constituents and other cattlemen in the West.

"Although the actual amount of the contract may be negligible in comparison with the total stores purchased by the Navy Department, my people, many of whom have been seriously pressed during the past few years, feel that it would be very unfair for them to have to compete with foreign products.

"It is my understanding that a differential of 25 percent has been arbitrarily set as the measure for your guidance in determining whether American products are offered for a reasonable price."

"Reasonable price" being the phrase used in the Buy American Act.

"Stockmen who are in many instances being assisted by the Government in purchasing cattle and in protecting their ranches cannot justify other agencies of the Government making purchases which are contrary to their interests.

"I would like to request, before final action is taken, should you be inclined to favor the purchase of the Argentine beef, that I be given an opportunity to present a brief in protection of the interests of American cattle producers."

LETTER TO THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

Beginning with that, there was a long series of correspondence and representations of one kind or another, which finally concluded with a telegram which I sent on March 31 to the Secretary of the Navy, having learned that the Bureau of Supplies was handing the matter up to the Secretary of the Navy for decison.

I called his attention in this telegram first to the Buy American Act and second to the fact that there was then pending before the Senate the so-called strategic minerals bill, which also contained a buy American provision; and I pointed out that the buy American provision in the strategic minerals bill had been endorsed by the Navy Department, the War Department, the Treasury Department, and the Interior Department at least, and, I think, some others. In other words, it was apparently a practically unanimous declaration upon the part of the executive departments in favor of the buy American provision. The State Department also had endorsed the strategic minerals buy American provision.

The result of all this was delay for weeks in acting upon the Argentine contract. Finally, the State Department was called in, as I understand, and then instructions were given to award the contract to Argentina.

QUALITY OF AMERICAN CANNED CORNED BEEF

It must be borne in mind, from the testimony you have already had from Admiral Spear, that this is the first time the Navy has purchased canned corned beef from Argentina. If there is anything wrong with the quality of American canned corned beef, then up to this hour the Navy Department has not been feeding the boys the sort of meat that it is now represented they ought to have.

Senator BURKE. Have you the figure as to the amount of corned beef that is canned in America?

Senator O'MAHONEY. I have not that figure. It is very small, I think, without any question.

Senator HALE. They have not been feeding the Navy canned corned beef packed in this country, except in very small quantities.

FEDERAL SPECIFICATIONS WITH RESPECT TO PURCHASE OF CANNED BEEF

Senator O'MAHONEY. That is true.

There are certain Federal specifications with respect to the purchase of canned beef. I have before me the specifications which are now in effect.

This document is entitled "Federal Standard Stock Catalog PP–B–201."

"A. Applicable Federal specifications.

"A–1. There are no other Federal specifications applicable to this specification.

* * * * * * *

"B. Grade.

"B–1. Corned beef shall be of but one grade, as specified herein.

"C. Material and workmanship.

"C–1. Shall be cut from best quality canner carcasses. Head meat, scrap meat, and meat from shanks, flanks, skirts, and navel end of plates to be excluded.

"D. General requirements.

"D–1. Unless specifically otherwise stated in the invitation for bids, the subject commodity shall be prepared only in a plant which is regularly operated under the supervision of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, and shall be inspected, passed, and marked in accordance with regulations governing meat inspection of the United States Department of Agriculture, 'United States inspected and passed by Department of Agriculture,' or the proper abbreviation thereof."

I am advised that the Bureau of Agricultural Economics has one man in Argentina.

INSPECTORS OF THE BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY

"H–1b. (1) The following shall apply as to purchases for the Navy:

"Inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry shall supervise the preparation of this product for the purpose of seeing that these specifications are complied with and shall see that the special Navy brand, bearing the date of inspection, is placed on each container of the product, or the product itself, or both, as applicable. Before beginning the preparation of the product the contractor shall notify the inspector of the Bureau of Animal Industry and shall afford every opportunity and facility for determining that the product is in accordance with these specifications. Upon final delivery the product will not be accepted by the Navy if it does not bear the special Navy brand.

"Final inspection shall be made at point of delivery."

TELEGRAM TO LOWEST DOMESTIC BIDDER

I telegraphed to the United Packers, Inc., who made the lowest domestic bid. This telegram was sent out on May 16, addressed to the United Packers, Inc., at Chicago, Ill.:

"Re canned corned beef contract, do you know if your samples were tested for specification? Are you prepared to meet specification? Would appreciate information as to experience of domestic firms in letting of canned corned beef contracts in past, as understand this is first time foreign bid accepted. Your early response will be appreciated, as matter is under immediate consideration in committee."

This is the response:

CHICAGO, ILL., May 16.

Answering your telegram just received, Navy does not request samples for test. However, all previous Navy purchases were made basis Federal specifications. Federal Standard Stock Catalog PP–B–201, section 4, part 5, paragraph H–1b, subject Bureau of Animal Industry inspection during production, and Navy inspection upon delivery. We are absolutely prepared to meet Federal specifications. We have canned beef on many contracts for Government agencies based on these Federal specifications, and have never received any quality complaints. Libby, McNeill & Libby, Armour & Co., Wilson & Co., and other domestic packers have competed with us for this business.

Respectfully,

UNITED PACKERS, INC.

DIFFERENCE IN DOMESTIC AND ARGENTINE BIDS

Now, the representation is made that the difference in price between the bid of the lowest Argentinean, fifteen-odd cents, against twenty-three- or twenty-four-odd cents, was sufficiently great that that should be the deciding factor in awarding this contract.

ORDER OF PROCUREMENT DIVISION ESTABLISHING TWO CLASSES OF REASONABLENESS

Admiral Spear yesterday presented to you the order from the Procurement Division which establishes two classes of reasonableness. In purchase under $100, the differential is 100 percent. In purchases over $100, the differential is 25 percent. To me, the significant thing is that according to the testimony of Admiral Spear yesterday, the difference between the low Argentine bid and the lowest domestic bid was 54 percent.

Senator BURKE. That is, disregarding the tariff duty?

Senator O'MAHONEY. No; I think including the tariff duty.

Senator BURKE. No.

Senator O'MAHONEY. All right.

Senator HALE. No; that included the 6 cents tariff duty.

Senator BYRNES. The answer to your statement, Senator, is that the difference in the bid to the Government is 149 percent. That is the answer Admiral Spear put in the record in response to your statement.

Senator O'MAHONEY. Yes; when you include the duty.

EXPLANATION OF DIFFERENCE IN BIDS

Senator BYRNES. What we were asking was the cost to the Government, to the taxpayers. His answer was that there was a difference of 149 percent.

Senator O'MAHONEY. All right. Accepting it, the answer to those figures is this:

In Argentina, the workers in the packing plants receive a wage of 12 cents an hour. In the United States, packing plants in competition with them, the workers receive 68.8 cents an hour. The differential of 25 percent arbitrarily fixed by the Procurement Division does not harmonize with the differential which the American workers receive over and above that which is paid to the packing employees in Argentina. That is why I have made the statement that I do not believe the United States Navy should be used for the purpose of exporting American jobs to South America. That is precisely what happens under a situation of this kind.

LOW BIDDER A GOVERNMENT COOPERATIVE IN ARGENTINA

The low bidder in this case is a Government cooperative in Argentina. I took up this matter with the Pan American Union, and I have here the Commercial Pan American, a Monthly Review of Commerce and Finance, No. 73, issued in June 1938, on Argentina's meat industry and trade.

I am not going to take the time to read all of this paper. I will incorporate it in the record. Let me read just the significant point:

"In October 1934 a law was enacted providing for the Corporacion Argentina de Productores de Carnes, or Argentine Meat Producers' Corporation. The principal objective of the organization as stated in the law was the promotion of the manufacture and trade in cattle products and byproducts in domestic and foreign markets, and the assuring of reasonable returns to cattle raisers.

* * * * * * * *

"In an address given before the Senate July 4, 1934—"

That is, the Argentine Senate—

"the then Argentine Minister of Agriculture, Señor don Luis Duhau, in explaining the position of meat-producing companies in which the Government had an interest, quoted from Dr. Roca's report made in June 1933 relative to the Roca-Runciman Pact as follows:"

The pact which he quotes is the trade agreement between Argentina and Great Britain, which was not to the advantage of the United States, as I know.

Then there is this statement:

"The quota allocated to the Corporacion Argentina de Productores de Carnes by the British Government was 11 percent of meat shipments from Argentina. The 15-percent quota included shipments from the frigorificos Grondona and Gualeguaychu, companies owned by Argentine interests in which the Government had no participation."

But this particular one is a cooperative in which the Government does have an interest.

QUESTION AS TO SUCCESSFUL BIDDER RECEIVING A SUBSIDY

Senator HOLMAN. In other words, am I to understand that in a measure it is subsidized?

Senator O'MAHONEY. Whether you can actually use the word "subsidized" in connection with it, I doubt, frankly; but it was formed for the purpose of establishing a cooperative among the cattle raisers of Argentina to enable them to export their meat at a lower price than operators could do who did not have the cooperative advantage.

Senator BYRNES. But the purpose of the tax was to enable them, out of the tax, to build a slaughterhouse which should be used for all producers.

Senator O'MAHONEY. Then, in a speech by Señor Duhau, outlining the purposes and objectives of the corporation, he said:

"It is clear that the advantages of the corporation for the livestock producers as a whole will not consist solely of the dividend distributed to the associated members, but also in the effect which the prices paid by the corporation will exercise on the general level of livestock prices."

ENCOURAGEMENT OF CATTLE BUSINESS IN ARGENTINA

In other words, we have here an organization that was formed by the Argentine Government for the express purpose of encouraging the cattle business in Argentina; and now, for the first time, although our Government heretofore has bought only American canned beef, it is undertaking to extend its patronage to this Government-formed and encouraged organization in Argentina.

INVITATION TO ARGENTINE PACKERS TO BID

Admiral Spear testified to you yesterday that the invitation to Argentine packers to bid was actually extended at the request of American packers who have plants in Argentina; and that brings me to what I conceive to be one of the most significant features of the whole matter. Forty-eight thousand pounds of meat are perhaps insignificant. The difference between an expenditure of $7,000 and an expenditure of $11,000 or $12,000 is apparently one of no very great concern. The importance of this expenditure, however, is the index it gives to the policy which we are to follow—the exportation of American capital to countries where there is a cheap labor market in order to produce products which can be produced in the United States of America, and then bringing those products back into the United States to compete with products manufactured under the high standard in this country.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF CATTLE INDUSTRY IN ARGENTINA BY A COOPERATIVE INSTITUTION

The Government of Argentina is trying to build up its cattle industry by a cooperative institution; and we now, for the first time, are extending our cooperation to this institution as a government, even though we have ourselves passed laws—the wage and hour law, among others—which makes it impossible for our people to produce meat at the low price at which it can be offered by the Argentinian.

Senator HALE. Our law makes it impossible even for the Americans who put up corned beef in Argentina to compete, because the Argentinians went below their price.

Senator O'MAHONEY. The situation is simply this: We are permitting American capital to export our jobs, and now we are permitting the American Navy to export our jobs.

PURCHASE OF AMERICAN PRODUCTS

Senator HOLMAN. May I add something to that? The same thing is true of timber. American operators in the Pacific Northwest are going up and operating in British Columbia.

Senator O'MAHONEY. This is not a question solely of canned corned beef. The amendment which is before the committee, and which was inserted in the House—and I am very happy that Representative SCRUGHAM was able to secure the support of the House for this amendment—is directed toward the purchase of all American products. If there is one point upon which everybody can agree, it is that the agricultural problem in the United States has not been settled. This amendment provides that at least the Government of the United States, which has endeavored to solve the agricultural problem, shall purchase domestic food products; and it seems to me there can be no two ways of thinking about the subject.

Thank you very much, gentlemen.

Senator GREEN. May I ask you a question?

Senator O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Senator GREEN. That amendment calls for the purchase of American products, regardless of price?

Senator O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Senator GREEN. Is that your position?

Senator O'MAHONEY. Yes; I believe we should buy them in America as long as we are trying to raise the standards all the way up.

Senator GREEN. Regardless of price, even if the American producer charges 200 percent more?

Senator HOLMAN. Correct, as long as the Government is shoving up his labor costs and his operating cost, unless we want to destroy industry in the United States.

Senator GREEN. Suppose the difference is 1,000 percent?

Senator BYRNES. We shall have plenty of time to argue that matter before the full committee.

(Thereupon, at 11 a. m., the subcommittee adjourned.)

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Wyoming in his general discussion, but I should like to ask whether there are any independent packers in the United States?

Mr. WALSH. There are innumerable producers of meat products all over the country.

Mr. LUNDEEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have yielded to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I asked a question which, I presume, the Senator from Minnesota desires to answer.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I should like to say a word in answer to the Senator, if the Senator from Wyoming will permit.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. LUNDEEN. There is in Minnesota the Hormel plant, which is a great independent packing plant located at Austin, Minn. Mr. Hormel is a most progressive and liberal man and so is the senior Mr. Hormel, his father. There are no finer packed goods produced anywhere in the world than are produced in that plant, and I resent the idea that foreign packers produce better goods than are produced by American packers. In addition to that, these plants employ American workmen. Let us not forget that, even if a cent or two more is paid for their goods than the price some foreign plant will charge. Remember our American standard of wages. We want no foreign products—produced by sweatshop labor—in competition with our own American products and goods. Are we American- or are we European-minded, foreign-minded? American products for an American Navy.

Mr. BORAH. I venture to say that, with all the eulogium which has been pronounced on these people, in the end it will be found they are controlled by the big packers of this country in the vital matters.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in connection with the resolution of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, I may say that when the provision restricting expenditures for food by the Navy Department to domestic products was before the Senate Committee on Appropriations I took occasion to call to the attention of the committee the fact that Admiral Spear, in testifying with respect to the Argentine beef contracts, stated that the request to Argentine packers to submit bids was made by the Navy Department this year at the request of domestic packers in the United States.

AMERICAN JOBS TO ARGENTINA

In all previous years the Navy's requirements for canned corned beef were obtained from domestic packers, but at the request of certain domestic packers who maintain packing plants in South America—in Argentina, in Brazil, and in Uruguay—the request was made to the Navy Department to invite the South American bids, because the domestic packer in the United States knew that it would be possible for it to produce corned beef cheaper in South America than it could produce it in the United States, because lower wages are paid to the packers in South America than are paid to the domestic workers in the domestic plants. In other words, the policy in which the Navy Department was engaging at the behest of the domestic packers was one of exporting jobs for American workers to South America.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not interrupt the Senator in the able speech he is making about sugar if it were not that he has already been interrupted, and, with his consent, the resolution has been read.

Listening to the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts, I think he has omitted some things which he should have included. He has the Navy, and the Army, and the Coast Guard, and so on, but just today I learned that Senators, United States Senators, at the restaurant in the Capitol, are eating corned beef packed in Brazil. I think we ought to include the United States Senate in the resolution, as well as the Coast Guard, and the Navy, and the Army.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I had intended to include all the heavy consumers of canned corned beef in the Government, and I had not realized that the Senate was such a heavy consumer.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope that when the resolution comes before the Senate—and I trust it will come before the Senate, and I should like to support it—the Senate will be included with the other activities of the Government.

If I may still trespass upon the good nature of the Senator from Wyoming, I should like to include as a part of my remarks an editorial appearing in the Lincoln Star, of Lincoln, Nebr., on Monday, May 15, 1939, under the headline "Dedicated to Jiggs." The editorial goes into the question which is now under debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Lincoln (Nebr.) Star of May 15, 1939]

DEDICATED TO JIGGS

That which has stirred Congress to its boot tips is of relatively small consequence. It involves the purchase of 28 tons of Argentine corned beef for the Navy. That would represent not to exceed 75 prime Nebraska steers at the most, which could become separated from the herds which graze the hills of some of these panhandle counties in Nebraska without anyone noticing it.

But over this Congress is about to launch into spirited battle.

And, again unfortunately, the President gave his bloodthirsty critics an opening to appeal to the prejudices and the pride of the American people. He said Argentine beef was superior to American produced beef. That will be good for more flag raising and flag waving by the Republican National Committee, by Republican Congressmen, and by the Democratic bloc which resents Mr. Roosevelt even more than the Republicans do, than the Fourth of July possibly could inspire.

The facts are comparatively simple. The amount of corned beef consumed in America is negligible compared to the market for appetizing steaks, tantalizing roasts, and steaming stews. True, there are those who say corned beef and cabbage is a tasty dish. Jiggs and his buddies have immortalized it in "Bringing up Father." And without reservation we can recommend it for hardy men who now and then invite epicurean adventure. But why waste a prime fed Nebraska steer on corned beef? The thick, juicy steak of a corn-fed Nebraska steer is one of life's great delights. It is one of life's anticipations filled and fulfilled with the eating. Why waste corn-fed Nebraska steers on corned beef when from out of the oven can emerge a delicately browned roast, with potatoes and gravy? And why offend the nostrils and insult the palate with stringy beef when a Nebraska corn-fed steer holds promise of a fragrant stew?

Why, why indeed?

All but the Congressmen, Republicans and embittered Democrats, know that the beef sold in cans is that which cannot be sold as steaks, roasts, stew, or even for the humble soup bowl.

The Nebraska steer, raised to glory on alfalfa and corn, offers up meat where the lesions have been closed by carefully prepared rations. No gristle belittles this noble creature. No stringiness and toughness detracts from the contributions which he makes to the tables of America. If people only knew it, the beef that goes into the can generally is grass-run—sometimes on the pampas of the Argentine—sometimes in the hills and the snug little valleys of Mexico.

Indirectly, the President was paying a high tribute to American beef. He was dignifying it with the acknowledgment that it had been brought to market under the most careful conditions. It has been brought to market after years of experiment, research, and study relating to proper rationing in order to produce the finest beef to be found in the world.

There may come a time when Argentina tightens quarantine regulations to make beef produced there admissible on the hoof, or through careful breeding and attention to the herds. And Argentina is giving careful attention to that. Within recent years the Argentine livestock interests have had representatives in Nebraska to purchase the choicest blooded stock from nationally and internationally known breeders to serve as foundation herds for the future Argentine cattle industry. Within the last 10 years Argentina has made purchases of the finest bulls and cows in Nebraska blooded herds, where years of endeavor and of careful methods have produced splendid cattle. Of course, the American breeder has enjoyed a lucrative business through these Argentine purchases. But again an intelligent people must realize they cannot expect always to be on the selling end and never in the buying field. Trade between nations never rested upon that foundation. Trade is an exchange of goods and services, and there has to be two parties to it.

We get all heated up and run our fingers through our hair over trifles. One day we moan and cry about the markets which have disappeared for the products of the farm and the factories, and the next day we shout that we do not intend to permit a single article of foreign production to come in.

We could do that when we were a debtor nation and were paying principal and interest with goods from the farms and the factories. But today Uncle Sam is a creditor nation; the greatest creditor nation in the world. More nations owe us money, and the obligations which they owe America are greater than have been due any country in the world. Now, if markets are to be recovered, we must be prepared to accept the goods and services of other countries. If we are not ready for that, then we shall have to produce only as much here as can be paid for and consumed here at the prices that can be maintained.

That is a tough spot, and one which an eager, enterprising, and ambitious nation could hope devoutly did not exist. But it does exist, and it is real; one of the most real economic factors against which we struggle.

But in Congress they will make the welkin ring, and they will get a lot of joy in debating for weeks over 56,000 pounds of corned beef, which is corned beef because it could not be roast beef, beef stew, or a thick steak.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he knows how much corned beef is actually produced and manufactured in the United States?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; I cannot say that I know the figures as to actual amount.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. My information is that practically no corned beef is manufactured in the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is not a fact.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. A negligible quantity is manufactured here; and I am informed that the corned beef which is manufactured here is of very poor quality, because all of the good cuts are used for fresh meat. Is that true?

CITES UNITED STATES SPECIFICATIONS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That question was answered before the Committee on Appropriations. I presented to the committee the Federal specifications with respect to the quality of canned corned beef. These specifications were adopted on November 10, 1931. They govern the quality of canned corned beef purchased on behalf of Government agencies. I read from the specifications:

B. Grade.
B–1. Corned beef shall be of but one grade, as specified herein.
C. Material and workmanship.
C–1. Shall be cut from best quality canner carcasses. Head meat, scrap meat, and meat from shanks, flanks, skirts, and navel end of plates to be excluded.
D. General requirements.
D–1. Unless specifically otherwise stated in the invitation for bids, the subject commodity shall be prepared only in a plant which is regularly operated under the supervision of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, and shall be inspected, passed, and marked in accordance with regulations governing meat inspection of the United States Department of Agriculture, "United States inspected and passed by Department of Agriculture," or the proper abbreviation thereof.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that if the Navy Department or the War Department or the Civilian Conservation Corps desired to require a domestic factory to pack tenderloin steak and turn it into corned beef the packer would comply with the specifications, because I have received a telegraphic response to an inquiry of mine from the low domestic bidder saying that it was always ready to meet the specifications, and that it had sold quantities of canned corned beef to the Government, to the Navy, in the past, and that never had there been any question raised as to its quality.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. My information is that 90 percent of all of the reasonably good corned beef which we get in the United States under the labels of Libby, and Swift, and Armour is actually produced in the Argentine, and Brazil, and Uruguay from beef of those countries.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My understanding is that last year there were imported into the United States about 79,000,000 pounds of just such corned beef, or other canned beef.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. My interest, Mr. President, is precisely like that of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know that, and I know the Senator has been very much interested in securing the adoption of the amendment which was approved by the Senate today.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I am becoming a little alarmed at the apparent intent to make our livestock industry a front for the packing industry. If the packers go down to Argentina and produce their beef there, and then, when a situation of the kind now being discussed occurs, raise a tempest about the purchase of $7,500 worth of beef from Argentina, and use the sentiment in the livestock States to further their interest, that is something I resent, and I am sure that if the Senator from Wyoming were convinced of those facts, he would resent it also.

DOMESTIC POLICY IMPORTANT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The statement of the Senator from Idaho makes it necessary for me to say that the tempest was not raised by the packers. It was raised by Representative JAMES SCRUGHAM, of Nevada, and by myself as long ago as February 14. I took the matter up with the Navy Department, and I urged the purchase of domestic canned beef, not as a service particularly to the packers, but as a part of the program which I am discussing here this afternoon, the holding of the domestic market for the American farmer and the American rancher. We cannot solve the agricultural program so long as we are content to invite the importation into the United States of agricultural commodities produced in other countries under conditions and standards which are much lower than those which we are wisely trying to establish in the United States.

I have made the contention that the expenditures which our Government is wisely making for the purpose of soil conservation, the expenditures which we are requiring American manufacturers to make in the payment of better wages to workmen, are all inevitable steps which we cannot avoid taking in the effort to preserve the consuming market of America for the producers of America.

So the tempest was not raised by the packers, Mr. President. It was raised by elected representatives of producers, who are convinced that the salvation for agriculture in America is to prevent the invasion of our domestic market by agricultural products from abroad. In saying that, let me in fairness add that I know it is the contention of the very distinguished Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, formerly a Member of the Senate, that the reciprocal-trade agreements which he has initiated are in many instances of benefit to agriculture. With that contention I differ; I do not believe that that can be proven, but I know that is the motive. The motive throughout the Government is to encourage and promote agriculture, and I am pointing out one way in which I think it can be done.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment further?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Of course, my ideas are in rather close agreement with those just expressed by the Senator from Wyoming, though he expressed them much more eloquently than I could hope to do. Let me ask the Senator, Is it true that in past years when contracts for canned corned beef have been awarded by the Navy to domestic packers the domestic packers have furnished such corned beef to the Navy from Argentine plants?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; it is not.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. That is not true?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is not my understanding. It was domestic corned beef.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I may say to the Senator from Wyoming that I have had contrary information, but he is unquestionably better informed upon the subject than am I. Of course, I do not mean to imply that anything is improper in raising this so-called tempest; but I think there may be some merit in the President's thought on the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. LUCAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield, first, to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] has suggested, I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is not true that in recent years American packers have not manufactured and had in stock quantities of canned corned beef sufficient to supply any considerable order from the Navy or any other Government agency, but that whenever they have ordered this particular food from American packers the packers have had to fill it by special order. They have been compelled to fill the order not out of their supply on hand, but they have been compelled to manufacture it as a special order in order to supply the Navy or any other governmental agency.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That may have been true, and the provision which is now carried in the naval appropriation bill will have the effect of compelling the production in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator realizes also, I assume, that the American people as a whole are not very large consumers of canned corned beef. The Senator is correct in the statement he made a moment ago that about 79,000,000 pounds of canned corned beef were imported into this country last year. Ever since the Spanish-American War, when there was a scandal with respect to the quality of beef supplied by the packers to the Army of the United States, canned corned beef rather descended in the estimation of the people as a food, and there were substituted for it other forms of meat products more palatable and more generally and universally consumed than corned beef. The American packers, we may say, got out of the habit very largely of producing canned corned beef, and they have produced such a comparatively small quantity in recent years, as I understand, that they have not been able to supply the demand of the Government, if its demands were to be completely supplied by American producers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When domestic producers can manufacture a commodity in any other country more cheaply than they can manufacture it in the United States, of course it is perfectly obvious that they would naturally like to see such a condition develop that they could ship it in from the outside.

AMERICAN JOBS EXPORTED

The point I am making is that that contributes to the exportation of jobs for American workmen, which should not be permitted, and, as the first step in placing a ban, in the midst of unemployment, on the exportation of jobs, I asked the Navy Department to make sure that the corned beef that it bought was corned beef produced in the United States. Small though the amount involved was, it was important as an index of the policy of encouraging domestic production, of encouraging and protecting the domestic producer, which I am now urging, not only upon the Senate but upon the administration, because I have no hesitation whatsoever in saying that the agricultural problem in the United States cannot be solved until we throw ourselves into the effort to protect and defend the American farmers and producers.

How many pounds of this or how many pounds of that, or whether it was produced here or whether it was produced there, are questions which are utterly and completely irrelevant to the point at issue, which is the American market for the American producer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not dispute the general correctness of that position, although I think it is bound to be conceded that we cannot entirely close the door of the American market to any agricultural product of any other country and expect them to open up their doors to any agricultural products of which we produce a surplus. I now wish to get back to corned beef, which seems to be the subject which occasioned the present furor. I do not care what caused the furor; all I am seeking is to get at the facts. Does not the fact that the American producers do not manufacture this particular article in quantity, and that they have had to produce it on special order, contribute to the vast difference between the cost of producing the particular article in the United States, which was twenty-three and a fraction cents a pound in the instance which caused the present discussion, and the nine and a fraction cents a pound at which the Government bought it, after deducting the 6 cents a pound tariff, which goes into the Treasury, and of course is taken out of one pocket and put into another? If the American packers produced this food in quantities sufficient to supply not only the Navy but the Army, or any other Government agency, and sufficient to supply the demand for private consumption among the people of the United States, would there not be a vast difference between the twenty-three and a fraction cents a pound which they undertook to charge the Navy, and what they could produce it for?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the answer to the Senator's question is "yes," that undoubtedly would be the result. But again I say it is irrelevant.

In answer to the question which was propounded by the junior Senator from Idaho and the question asked by the Senator from Kentucky, I have before me a quotation from the hearings when Admiral Spear appeared before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. Senator BYRNES, chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, asked the admiral:

> Is that the first time the Navy has bought Argentine beef?

The admiral responded:

> In over a period of 10 years. And we would not have bought it at this time—perhaps it would not have occurred to us to ask for foreign bids if it had not been represented by domestic packers that they would like to furnish some meat or have an opportunity to furnish good corned beef from Argentine.

And then listen to this:

> And that they could save money.

There is the point exactly. The domestic packers who have exported American capital to South America to build packing plants there to produce beef or canned meat which is in competition with that produced by American producers would want this change in order that they might make some money, and it was against that that I was protesting.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield further for a moment, if in 10 years the Navy has bought only 48,000 pounds of this particular commodity——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The contract which was signed the other day was for 48,000 pounds.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood the admiral to testify that that was all the Navy had bought in 10 years. If in 10 years the Navy has bought only 48,000 pounds, and we are bringing into this country 79,000,000 pounds a year, certainly the consumption of somebody besides the Navy is infinitely more important than what the Navy may buy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no question about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Forty-eight thousand pounds of foreign beef would not represent more than 30 or 40 head of cattle. It might represent more head of cattle than that in consequence of the fact that the corned beef in this country is very largely made from certain portions of the animal which are not particularly relishable as steak, roast, or other products. However, in countries like Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, or Brazil, because the better qualities and better cuts of beef are not consumed domestically, some of them are used in the manufacture of corned beef. The point is that it seems to me that our complaint, if we have one, is not against the Navy, which has bought only 48,000 pounds in a year——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not complaining against the Navy. This is the first error the Navy has made in 10 years; and we are trying to correct it before the error becomes habitual, that is all.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the American people are to be induced to reduce their own private consumption of imported corned beef, the result will have to be brought about by some method other than requiring the Navy alone to buy only American corned beef.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Finance, and he could contribute mightily to the accomplishment of that object by one or two little provisions dealing with this very subject. At the last session of Congress I introduced an amendment providing for an excise tax, which went to the Committee on Finance. The effect of the amendment would have been to cut down the 79,000,000 pounds and to divert the market from Argentine beef to American beef. The amendment would have been very, very salutary. Upon that occasion the Senator could have contributed to the solution of the very question he now raises.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator has in mind the tariff, there is already a tariff of 6 cents a pound on corned beef, which is about two-thirds of the price paid for it by the Navy, and would represent, in proportion to domestic prices, about 25 percent. I wish to say to the Senator that I hope I shall always be ready and willing to do whatever is essential and reasonable for the protection and advancement of American agriculture. However, we are required to find a foreign market for a large quantity of our surplus agricultural products. I do not refer to corned beef, because we do not have any surplus of corned beef. We do not even make enough for our own use. In order to sell our surplus of cotton, tobacco, wheat, and other agricultural products which I might mention—I mention those only as samples—it is necessary for us to find a foreign market. I do not see the wisdom of any political economy which undertakes to embargo, or even in effect to embargo, the importation of other agricultural products from countries which might consume much of our surpluses of commodities which they do not have, in order to give an advantage to one particular group of agricultural products. Wherever we can level off in a fair and reasonable way, in order that we may find markets for our own commodities, and at the same time not let down the bars to the importation of other products, we can afford to do so. In the absence of further information, I believe that a tariff of 6 cents a pound on imported corned beef is fairly reasonable protection.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD BUY AMERICAN

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator is embarking upon very dangerous ground. For example, it was pointed out in the discussion in the committee that it would be very simple indeed to clothe the Army and Navy with Japanese garments, at a very much lower price than that at which those garments could be purchased from domestic producers. The significant point which I think the Senator overlooks is that when the Government of the United States enters the market to make purchases, it should confine its purchases to products produced domestically. The people of America are free. They have their individual rights. If American citizens want to buy foreign products, well and good; but the principle for which I am contending is that the Government of the people, in all its purchases, should adopt the principle of encouraging domestic production.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the third day of March 1933, there was signed and approved an act known as the Buy American Act. Section 2 of that act contains this provision:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and unless the head of the department or independent establishment concerned shall determine it to be inconsistent with the public interest, or the cost to be unreasonable, only such unmanufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been mined or produced in the United States, and only such manufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been manufactured in the United States substantially all from articles, materials, or supplies mined, produced, or manufactured, as the case may be, in the United States, shall be acquired for public use. This section shall not apply with respect to articles, materials, or supplies for use outside the United States—

And so forth. In other words, the law which we passed some 6 years ago, which undertook to confine the purchase of supplies among all the departments of the Government to American-produced articles, except when such purchase would be inconsistent with the public interest or when the cost was unreasonable, undoubtedly gives to any department the right to consider whether or not the comparative costs are unreasonable.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. In this particular case, in view of the limitations of our own domestic product, in view of the difference between 9 and a fraction cents and 23 and a fraction cents, and in view of the small quantity purchased by the Navy compared with the large quantity which is imported into the United States, I do not think the President is subject to any criticism whatever in the purchase of 48,000 pounds of this particular food when the difference was the difference between 9 cents and 23 cents. While the saving did not amount to very much in that particular case, the law authorized him, in determining whether he should purchase domestic products or foreign products, to take into consideration the comparative cost. In the present case the difference between the domestic and the foreign article was more than 250 percent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The difference was 149 percent when one computes the tariff.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we consider the 6-cent tariff——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The difference is 149 percent; otherwise it is 54 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. The money goes out of one pocket into another. The tariff is collected into the Treasury, and paid out by somebody in the Treasury in the 6-cent tariff on the article. However, considering the net cost, regardless of tariff, the difference was about 250 percent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; the Senator is mistaken in those figures. As I recall, the testimony of Addmiral Spear was that the difference was 149 percent when the tariff was computed, and 54 percent when the tariff was not computed. However, that is beside the point. It is true that the contract was for 48,000 pounds, but the Navy consumes 600,000 pounds annually, and the principle which is involved is the principle of encouragement of domestic production.

Now, Mr. President, returning to the subject of sugar, after the bill which had been passed by the Senate went to the House it was in regular order referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Before the Senator returns to the sugar question, I should like——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall be worn out talking about corned beef, and I shall not be able to finish my speech on sugar.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator can be revived by eating some Brazilian corned beef in the Senate restaurant.

Mr. LUCAS. I was about to discuss that subject. I thought the Senator rose primarily to discuss corned beef rather than sugar.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No, Mr. President. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator, but I cited the particular amendment which arose out of the controversy on corned beef merely to indicate to the Department of Agriculture that when the Congress of the United States, without a dissenting vote, except in the committee, puts itself on record in favor of the purchase by the Government of domestic food products, the time has come for the Department of Agriculture to reconsider the policy by which it has permitted the price of sugar to go so low that the domestic producers are in danger of not being able to produce at a profit.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I appreciate the very serious argument which the Senator is making. It is a very good one. However, the Senator from Nebraska, in asking a question a moment ago, rather intrigued me, and I should like to know whether or not the Senator from Wyoming has any information or knowledge as to who is responsible for the purchase of the corned beef we eat in the Senate restaurant, and which I understand comes from South America.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the answer to that question is that the restaurant and all the other services which we have in the Senate are under the direction of the Committee on Rules. It is my recollection that the Senator from Illinois is a member of that committee. If he is, I suggest that he raise that question in the Committee on Rules and see if he also cannot contribute to the building up of a market for domestic canned corned beef.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in that connection?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, if I may answer, the Senator from Illinois is a new member of the Committee on Rules. So far the committee has never had a meeting since I have been a member of it. That may be the reason that I know nothing about the duties of the members of the Rules Committee as yet; but I was thinking of the corned beef which I ate at luncheon in the restaurant at noon. I am frank to say that it was a choice cut, whether it was produced in this country or produced in the Argentine.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Since we are going into the Senator's diet, let me ask him whether it was a cold cut or a warm cut that he ate?

Mr. LUCAS. I will say, for the information of the Senator, that it was a warm cut.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then it was not canned corned beef.

Mr. LUCAS. Then the Senator from Nebraska is in error in what he said a moment ago.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is foreign canned beef in the restaurant below, but it is the cold-cut variety; no uncanned Argentine meat is allowed to enter the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, even canned corned beef can be warmed so that it will be warm when it is eaten.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not the Argentine canned beef; I do not believe anything can warm that.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to be pretty hot at the moment.

Mr. NORRIS. A good many Senators seem to be warming it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, irrespective of whether it was a cold cut or a warm cut, nevertheless there is some corned beef in the Senate restaurant at the present time which came from the Argentine. The Senate of the United States is responsible for that beef being in its restaurant, and I am just wondering whether or not the President may, perhaps, have felt that if corned beef coming from the Argentine was good enough for Senators it might be good enough for the Navy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, that question answers itself. Now, if I may be permitted to do so, I will resume my brief discussion with regard to sugar.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Since the Senator from Wyoming is returning to his original subject—a sweeter subject—I should like to ask him a question. Does the Senator think it is ever proper policy under any consideration for this Government to restrict production of an American product which is a nonsurplus product? For example, as I understand, on the mainland we produce only about 30 percent of the sugar we consume.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is exactly the statement I made a few moments ago.

Mr. ANDREWS. We import from Cuba 2,000,000 tons, which is nearly one-third of the sugar we use in this country. We are not allowed to produce here at home sufficient sugar to supply our own needs; yet we are supposed to be peddling importations under a trade agreement, when, as a matter of fact, we sell to Cuba about a little over 50 percent of what we buy from Cuba. So, that it is a bad bargain anyway it may be considered. But coming down, now, to the question of to whom the benefits go, we understand that, for instance, the laborers in Cuba are paid about 56 cents per day, whereas in Florida we pay those who raise the sugar nearly $2 a day, and every cent of that money is spent here at home.

The main question that I want to ask the Senator is, Can it ever be a proper policy for us to restrict the production of a farm commodity that is a nonsurplus product?

SHOULD BE NO RESTRICTION OF SUGAR PRODUCTION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is my conviction that the American market should be reserved first to American producers and that there should be no restriction upon domestic production of any agricultural commodity, sugar included.

For practical reasons, because it was necessary in order to reach a solution, many of us representing the sugar-producing States of the Union submitted to a limitation, but we were careful to see that that limitation was so fixed as not to be below the production at the time it was fixed. That is why on the passage of the bill I voted for the measure brought in by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] which would prevent the destruction of crops already planted in the State of Louisiana. Now, I want to bring about a condition which will permit the expansion of the sugar-producing area in continental United States and in its possessions.

AMENDMENT NECESSARY AND URGENT

Mr. President, when the measure, having passed the Senate, reached the House of Representatives, it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture. As I have said, I was hopeful that, under the leadership of the distinguished and able chairman of that committee, who knows this problem backward and forward, a serious study would be undertaken to determine all the factors which should be taken into consideration and then to report a bill at the present session of Congress which would raise the price for the domestic producer and which would prevent the price of sugar in the United States reaching the low level that has already been reached in cotton and other products.

SHOULD ACT NOW

When the price of sugar is going down, I feel that, with an instrumentality upon the statute books which can be used to stabilize that price with a slight amendment, that amendment should be made, and that effort should be undertaken by the executive branch of the Government of the United States. But when the bill reached the committee, representations were made on behalf of the State Department, the Interior Department, and the Department of Agriculture, as a result of which the bill not only has not come out of that committee but no hearings have been held, the word is going out around the country now that there is to be no legislation upon the subject of sugar this year, and that, perhaps, in 1940, when the Sugar Act of 1937 expires, there may not even then be legislation.

I wish to make it just as clear as words can make it that the domestic producers of the United States do not believe in any such program; they will use every power at their command to protect, encourage, and develop the industry; and that can be done, Mr. President, without the slightest burden or injury upon any other element of our population.

MEASURE NOT UNJUST

Representation was made to the committee that this measure was unjust to the consumers; that it was unjust to Hawaii and Puerto Rico; and that, furthermore, it was a violation of our trade treaty with Cuba—I cannot fail to call a trade agreement a treaty because we all know that such agreements are treaties, though not ratified by the Senate of the United States—and of another sugar treaty which was ratified by the Senate. I am undertaking this afternoon to show that all these charges are without the slightest foundation, and this bill is not unjust to the consumers of the United States.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ANDREWS. A few nights ago while I was in Florida the radio station at Habana could be heard very clearly in Florida. Someone speaking over the radio at the Habana station, someone who seemed to speak with authority, then stated that he did not look for any change in the quota of Cuban sugar to be exported to the United States because the Cuban sugar interests were owned by two large banks in the city of New York—owned by Americans. So they did not look for any reduction or any change at all.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has put his finger upon one of the sore spots in our present-day economy. As another illustration of the point which I mentioned a little while ago of the exportation of American jobs and American markets—a short-sighted, a self-defeating movement—though I mention it with a great deal of hesitation because it may again open up the Argentine beef discussion, let me say that when this question was before the committee it was stated by one member of the committee that we must buy beef from Argentina because Argentina, in turn, is purchasing automobiles made in the United States.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will ask the Senator to pardon me for just a moment. The statement was made that General Motors Corporation is exporting automobiles to Argentina and that, therefore, we should be willing to make an exchange of agricultural products in order to get that Argentine market for our automobiles. At the time that testimony was given, I had not had the opportunity of reading the report which appeared yesterday in the New York Times, and which was called to my attention by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. There we had the interesting and, indeed, amazing information, that payment is being received by the General Motors Corporation in the bonds of the Argentine Government, for the automobiles which are being exported.

Certainly we have had enough experience in exporting American jobs in return for written pieces of paper executed by foreign governments or foreign agencies of any kind.

Experience should teach us the fundamental economic fact we are overlooking is that there is no way of paying for commodities except in commodities. When we are dealing with commodities which a great country like the United States can produce, in most cases more than it can consume, and in the case of some commodities less than it can consume, it seems to me to be perfectly obvious that it is no help to our economy either to export capital to other countries to take advantage of lower standards of living to manufacture products to be shipped back in competition with our own, or to receive in payment for such commodities which are shipped out written promises to pay which do not represent a thing in the world except commitments. Our experience after the World War was that commitments of that kind are not honored. Having exported many soldiers to fight the war, when the war was concluded we sent commodities to Europe, and received in return the bonds of European governments which have since been repudiated. I should not be a bit surprised to find that American corporations which export commodities to foreign countries, and receive bonds in payment, are piling up for themselves the same experience that the people of the United States had following the World War.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. In the course of the Senator's remarks he has just mentioned certain commodities which we produce in the United States less than we consume. I wondered what commodities, aside from sugar, the Senator had in mind.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Sugar is the one I am talking about. Rubber and tin are among the commodities of which we produce less than we can consume.

My contention now is that the sugar bill which passed the Senate and went to the House is not adverse to the interests of the domestic consumer. In proof of that assertion, I have before me a table compiled from the figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor, showing the monthly variations in the average retail sugar prices from 1930 down to and including February 1939.

LOW SUGAR PRICES

What danger was incurred by domestic consumers of the sugar crop? The average retail price of sugar in the United States in 1933, before the Jones-Costigan Act was passed, was 5.3 cents per pound. In 1934 it was 5.5 cents. In 1935 it was 5.7 cents. In 1936 it was 5.6 cents. In 1937 it was 5.6 cents. In 1938 it was 5.3 cents. Now it is 5.1 cents. So, obviously, there has been such a slight variation in the price of sugar to the domestic consumer since before the bill was passed that there seems to be no foundation whatsoever for any fear that this legislation will be injurious to the interests of the consumer. The Jones-Costigan Act did not so operate. This act has not so operated; but it is said that the bill which passed the Senate eliminated the provision which was inserted in the act of 1937 for the protection of the American consumer. That provision, however, was not in the Jones-Costigan Act.

If the Jones-Costigan Act without this provision did not raise the price of sugar to the consumer, how, then, can it be argued that the elimination of the provision which was written into the act of 1937 would raise the price? The fact of the matter is that this particular provision which was eliminated in the House is exactly the provision which brought about the reduction of the returns which domestic producers are receiving for their sugar crop, because it resulted in the Secretary of Agriculture's making an estimate of consumption in the United States which was greatly in excess of the actual consumption.

INTENT OF CONGRESS TO PROTECT UNITED STATES SUGAR INDUSTRY

Let us bear in mind that the purpose of the Sugar Control Act was primarily to protect the domestic sugar industry. It was a substitute for the tariff policy, which admittedly had failed, because it could not keep out the great quantity of Philippine sugar which was pouring into the United States. The primary purpose of that act was to protect the domestic producer, while at the same time not causing such great increase of price to the consumer as to throw the economy out of balance. So in the Jones-Costigan Act a formula, which I shall insert in the RECORD as part of my remarks, was developed and enacted into law, which authorized the Secretary to fix the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States.

The language of the act was:

> The consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, for the calendar year 1934, and for each succeeding calendar year, shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture.

Into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture was given the power, the responsibility, and the duty of estimating the consumption requirements, and then it was provided:

> The consumption requirements so determined shall, at such intervals as the Secretary finds necessary to effectuate the declared policy and the purposes of this act, be adjusted by him to meet the actual requirements of the consumer as determined by the Secretary.

In other words, the proposal clearly was, "Find out what the consumption requirements are and, if the estimates are wrong, adjust the estimates so that they may meet the actual requirements for consumption."

The language of that act very clearly illustrates the point which we must all remember—that continental United States is the great market of the world for sugar, and all of the sugar producers of the world would like to pour their quantities of sugar into the United States. There was a time when that was going on and when we were so dependent upon sugar from areas outside of continental United States, and principally upon sugar from Cuba in the 1920's, that the price of sugar to the consumer went higher than 20 cents a pound. The production and expansion of the domestic sugar industry is the surest guaranty to the American consumer that he will receive sugar at a fair price.

So far as I know, there never was any request upon the part of the producers of sugar beets and sugar cane in the United States to exploit the consumer. Certainly that is not the policy of the producers of sugar beets. Those producers have complied with every single regulation that has been laid down by the Department of Agriculture. We have submitted to every provision that was written into the act. Indeed, we ourselves wrote the provisions in the act to raise the standard of labor in America.

Mr. ANDREWS. Many of us can remember the price of sugar during the war and immediately following the war. In the event that the situation in the Far East shall develop to the point where the Philippine Islands may not be longer available to us—and that is not beyond the realm of possibility—the commerce with the Philippines can be cut off from the United States by a war with Japan. Inasmuch as 17 or 18 percent of the sugar consumed by the people of the United States comes from the Philippine Islands, in the event those islands should be cut off, would we not have a sugar famine in the United States which would take 4, 5, or 6 years to overcome, and might not sugar possibly go back to 20 or 25 cents a pound?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think there is good ground for the fears expressed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ANDREWS. And there is the further fact that we have plenty of land here on which we can raise the sugar which we need.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly. When it became necessary to pass new legislation, and the Sugar Act of 1937 was under consideration in the House of Representatives, the Committee on Agriculture adopted a formula with respect to consumer prices and the declared policy of the act not very different from that in the Jones-Costigan Act, but containing one provision which the members of the Committee on Finance, and Senators representing the sugar-producing States, were unwilling to accept. That provision was one which tied the price of sugar to the other basic commodities.

SUGAR ACT NOT TIED TO OTHER LAWS

It was the belief of those of us who were representing the sugar-producing States that it would be unwise to tie sugar to cotton, to wheat, or to these other commodities, because we feared that, if those commodities suffered a depressed price, and they have, it would be inevitable that sugar also would suffer a depressed price. We felt that, since sugar was to be a self-financing program, it was not necessary to bind all of these agricultural commodities together so as to prevent improvement in the one. And the Sugar Act was to be an independent law. Therefore we insisted upon separating sugar from the formula which came over from the House of Representatives.

This provision was section 201 of the House bill 7667. Again it authorized the Secretary to determine the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers, and it also instructed him that he "shall make allowances for a deficiency or surplus in inventories of sugar." And observe this, "and changes in consumption." In other words, provision was carefully drafted giving to the Secretary of Agriculture himself the complete power, first to fix the estimate and then to change it in order to adjust it to the needs of consumption.

Then the provision to which we took exception was this:

> And in order that the regulation of commerce provided for under this act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary shall make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available under this act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to make the production of sugar beets and sugar cane as profitable on the average per dollar of total gross income as the production of the five principal agricultural cash crops in the United States.

It was that tying of sugar to these other crops to which we raised objection, not to the provisions which guaranteed protection to the consumer against excessive prices. The producer does not want excessive prices.

When the bill finally passed the Senate that provision was eliminated, but in conference between the two Houses another formula was developed, to the effect that the additional allowances might be made "so that the supply of sugar made available under this act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic-sugar industry as a whole, and the amounts of such additional allowances shall be such that in no event will the amount of the total supply be less than the quantity of sugar required to give consumers of sugar in the continental United States a per capita consumption equal to that of the average of the 2-year period 1935–36."

INTERPRETATION OF SUGAR ACT

This provision, which was interpreted as requiring the estimate to be such as to provide a certain definite per capita consumption, had the effect of making it necessary, according to the interpretation of the Department of Agriculture, to make an estimate in excess of the consumptive requirements in the United States.

So all in the world that was asked by the producers of beet sugar was that this provision of the law which made necessary, by the Secretary of Agriculture, according to the interpretation of the sugar section, an excessive estimate, an estimate of more than could be consumed, should be eliminated so that we could go back to the principle of the Jones-Costigan Act, which did not result in excessive prices to consumers.

Mr. President, the purpose and effect of the bill passed by the Senate, so far as it affects consumers in the United States, has not been understood, and has not been correctly represented to the Committee on Agriculture in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Of course, I subscribe most heartily to everything the Senator has stated, and will subscribe, I am sure, to everything he will say. He mentions consumers, and I wonder whether the administration realizes that the sugar program is the only agricultural program which does not cost the consumer or the taxpayer a dime, and that it is the only agricultural program which will return to the Treasury a surplus in excess of $13,000,000 next year. So that not only does it not cost the consumer anything by virtue of an increased price of sugar, but it actually costs the consumer nothing by way of taxes, and this year returns to the Treasury a surplus. We pay out of the Treasury hundreds of millions of dollars every year, and rightly so, for the benefit of the cotton farmer, and the wheat farmer, and the corn farmer. That does constitute a tax on the consumer. But the sugar program is self-financing, self-liquidating. Not only does it not raise the price of the product, but it actually returns a surplus to the Treasury. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct. The appropriation which was made in the agricultural appropriation bill this year for the administration of the Sugar Act of 1937, which includes the benefit payments and all expenses, was, as I recall the figures, $47,950,000. The estimates of the Treasury are to the effect that the revenue to be derived from the tax paid by the sugar processors will be $62,200,000 in the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is a self-supporting program, and all in the world it needs so far as serving the interests of the producers is concerned is a correct formula for the determination of the estimates of consumption and raising restrictive production limitations for farmers.

Curiously enough, from the very beginning there has been a tendency to overestimate the consumption requirements. Let us bear in mind, when the consumption estimate is made, that that is the basis upon which the allocation of sugar is made to the various sugar-producing areas. The quotas depend upon the amount to be consumed.

In 1934 the estimate of consumption under the Jones-Costigan Act was 144,415 tons more than the actual consumption, and we went into that season under that act with an estimated surplus from the year before of stocks on hand of something like 500,000 tons.

In 1935 the picture changed a little. In that year the estimate was 373,255 tons less than the actual consumption, but that was the only year during the administration of the act when the estimate was less than the consumptive requirements.

EXCESSIVE ESTIMATES OF CONSUMPTION

In 1936 the estimate exceeded consumption by 106,000 tons. In 1937 it exceeded consumption by 382,000 tons. In 1939 it exceeded consumption by 113,872 tons. And it exceeds consumption now, although it is impossible, of course, to know what the final consumption for 1939 will be. But this we do know, that consumption is not keeping pace with that of the previous year.

The estimated consumption for 1939 was 6,755,386 tons. The consumption in 1938 was only 6,666,694 tons. With a consumption last year of 6,666,000 tons, the estimate for this year was almost 100,000 tons in excess.

It is perfectly obvious that when consumption does not meet the estimate, and production and imports are made upon the basis of the estimate, and quotas are distributed on the basis of the estimate, there is a surplus which remains on hand to depress the market in the succeeding year; and that is precisely what happened; and it is precisely against that, Mr. President, that Senators from the sugar-producing States have made their protest.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks the consumer formula of the Jones-Costigan Act, the consumer formula in the sugar bill of 1937 as it came from the House, the consumer formula in the Sugar Act of 1937, and the consumer formula as contained in the amendatory measure which is now reposing in the files of the Committee on Agriculture in the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CONSUMER FORMULA IN JONES-COSTIGAN ACT

(2) (A) The consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States for the calendar year 1934 and for each succeeding calendar year shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture. The consumption requirements so determined shall, at such intervals as the Secretary finds necessary to effectuate the declared policy and the purposes of this act, be adjusted by him to meet the actual requirements of the consumer as determined by the Secretary.

(B) In the event that available statistics of the Department of Agriculture during the course of any calendar year indicate that the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States for such calendar year will exceed the amount of the consumption requirements determined for that year, the Secretary of Agriculture may prorate such estimated excess amount on the basis of the respective quotas determined by and pursuant to subsection (1) of this section: Provided, however, That for each calendar year there shall be allotted to continental United States not less than 30 percent of any amount of consumption requirements therefor above 6,452,000 short tons raw value.

(C) In the event that available statistics of the Department of Agriculture during the course of any calendar year indicate that the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States for such year will be less than the amount of the consumption requirements determined for that year, the amount of such deficiency may be proportionately deducted from the respective quotas determined by and pursuant to paragraph (A) of subsection (1) of this section.

(D) If, during any calendar year, any producing area is unable to produce and deliver its full quota of sugar, the Secretary of Agriculture may prorate this deficiency among the other areas on the basis of their respective quotas and ability to supply the deficiency.

(E) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (A) to (C), inclusive, of subsection (1) of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture may, in order to effectuate the declared policy of this act, from time to time, by orders or regulations, deduct from the quotas for production, importing, receiving, and/or marketing, and/or from the allotments thereof, established pursuant to said paragraphs, in any given year, an amount for each year, respectively, representing the surplus stocks of sugar produced in that area, or a portion of the total surplus stocks of sugar produced in that area, in whole or in part, which may have accumulated in the year next preceding, over and above the quotas established for such year.

[From H. R. 7667]

TITLE II. QUOTA PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. The Secretary shall determine for each calendar year the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers in the continental United States; such determinations shall be made during the month of December in each year for the succeeding calendar year and at such other times during such calendar year as the Secretary may deem necessary to meet such requirements. In making such determinations the Secretary shall use as a basis the quantity of direct-consumption sugar distributed for consumption, as indicated by official statistics of the Department of Agriculture, during the 12-month period ending October 31 next preceding the calendar year for which the determination is being made, and shall make allowances for a deficiency or surplus in inventories of sugar and changes in consumption as computed from statistics published by agencies of the Federal Government with respect to inventories of sugar, population, and demand conditions; and in order that the regulation of commerce provided for under this act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary shall make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available under this act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to make the production of sugar beets and sugarcane as profitable on the average per dollar of total gross income as the production of the five principal (measured on the basis of acreage) agricultural cash crops in the United States.

TITLE II. QUOTA PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. The Secretary shall determine for each calendar year the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers in the continental United States; such determinations shall be made during the month of December in each year for the succeeding calendar year and at such other times during such calendar year as the Secretary may deem necessary to meet such requirements. In making such determinations the Secretary shall use as a basis the quantity of direct-consumption sugar distributed for consumption, as indicated by official statistics of the Department of Agriculture, during the 12-month period ending October 31 next preceding the calendar year for which the determination is being made, and shall make allowances for a deficiency or surplus in inventories of sugar and changes in consumption as computed from statistics published by agencies of the Federal Government with respect to inventories of sugar, population, and demand conditions; and in order that the regulation of commerce provided for under this act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary may make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available under this act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic-sugar industry as a whole, and the amounts of such additional allowances shall be such that in no event will the amount of the total supply be less than the quantity of sugar required to give consumers of sugar in the continental United States a per capita consumption equal to that of the average of the 2-year period 1935–36.

CONSUMER FORMULA OF AMENDATORY ACT

[S. 69]

SEC. 201. The Secretary shall determine for each calendar year the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers in the continental United States; such determinations shall be made during the month of December in each year for the succeeding calendar year and at such other times during such calendar year as the Secretary may deem necessary to meet such requirements. In making such determinations the Secretary shall use as a basis the quantity of direct-consumption sugar distributed for consumption, as indicated by official statistics of the Department of Agriculture, during the 12-month period ending October 31 next preceding the calendar year for which the determination is being made, and shall make allowances for a deficiency or surplus in inventories of sugar, and changes in consumption, as computed from statistics published by agencies of the Federal Government with respect to inventories of sugar, population, and demand conditions.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I also ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point, the table from which I have read giving the average prices of sugar to the consumer, and also the table which I have compiled dealing with estimates and consumptions, showing the difference between the two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANSWERS OBJECTIONS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall have to hurry through, and cannot take as much time as I had intended to take to discuss the subject. However, let me briefly summarize the other principal objections which have been made to the measure. The measure is not adverse to the interests of the producers of sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico. I say it is not adverse because every sponsor of the measure agreed over his own signature, and agreed with the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that the slight arithmetical error which was made in the computation of the allocations to Hawaii and Puerto Rico would be corrected. We are quite willing to make the correction in order that there shall be no reduction in the production of raw sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

It should be called to the attention of the Senate and of the public that in the Sugar Act of 1937 it was provided that 55.59 percent would be the quota for domestic sugar-producing areas and 44.41 to foreign countries. The provision is that "whenever a determination is made pursuant to section 201," which is the section which prescribes the formula by which the consumption requirement shall be found, the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers, the Secretary shall establish quotas or revise existing quotas for the domestic sugar-producing areas of 55.59 percent, and for foreign countries and the Commonwealth of the Philippines 44.41 percent.

The amendment which we proposed, and which passed the Senate, had the effect of increasing the proportion for domestic producers from 55.59 percent to 60 percent and decreasing the proportion for foreign countries, including the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, from 44.41 to 40 percent. Even here there was not a proposal to grant unlimited expansion to the domestic producing industry, but only the provision that a certain addition should be made sufficient to allow vitally necessary expansion in the United States.

If there were any errors in the formula there, the sponsors of the bill were then ready, and stand ready now, to make such alterations as may be necessary.

It was not a real violation of the international treaty. It may have been a technical violation, but the difference in the allocation to foreign countries provided for in the bill passed by the Senate and the allocation under the old bill was only twenty-two one-thousandths of 1 percent—certainly not a figure that would require very much labor and energy to amend.

As for the provision with regard to Louisiana, the only effect of that was that it would prevent the plowing up of planted sugarcane, and I doubt very much whether there is any Member of the House or the Senate who will say that sugarcane once planted should be plowed up and that the producer should not be permitted to dispose of it to advantage.

There remains only one subject for me to discuss in the time that is available to me, and that has to do with the urgent need for expansion, particularly in the beet-producing areas.

OPPORTUNITIES CITED

Early in January I addressed a letter to the Bureau of Reclamation asking for a statement with respect to the areas in the West now under reclamation which need but cannot receive an allocation for the planting of sugar beets. I ask unanimous consent that the response which I received from the Commissioner of Reclamation may be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF RECLAMATION,
Washington, January 10, 1939.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: Complying with your request for information relating to the possibilities of an expansion of the sugar-beet acreage on the projects that have been or are now being constructed with Government funds, the following statement is submitted:

MONTANA

Sugar factories have been constructed on or in the immediate vicinity of the Huntley (Billings), Lowey Yellowstone (Sidney), Milk River (Chinook), and Bitter Root (Missoula) projects. For the past 10 or 15 years sugar beets have been grown on the Sun River project directly west of Great Falls, and the private projects of Conrad and Valier, north of Sun River, and the beets shipped to the Chinook factory. Reports have been received that about 5,000 acres were planted in 1938. Sugar-beet associations on these three projects, representing about 1,100 growers, have obtained written contracts covering over 10,000 acres of land, to be planted to beets if and when the limitation on acreage is removed and a factory erected in the immediate vicinity. If the beets from the 5,000 acres now being sent to the Chinook factory are taken over by the Sun River factory, there will be requirement for an equal expansion in the sugar-beet area on the Milk River project.

NEBRASKA

There are now six factories serving the North Platte project in Nebraska, to which there has been allocated 59,675 acres for 1939. No statement has as yet been received in this office as to the need of an expansion in the acreage, but for this discussion it will be assumed that an increase of about 10 percent, or 6,000 acres, will be required in the immediate future.

At the present time there is one factory serving the lower valley at Grand Island, which has been allotted an acreage of 13,750 acres for 1939. With the development of the irrigation projects in the North Platte Valley below the Government project, which comprise the Tricounty project, with an area of approximately 400,000 acres, the Sutherland project, where supplemental water is to be supplied to an irrigated area of about 100,000 acres, the North Loup district, with 48,000 acres of land susceptible of irrigation, and the Middle Loup district, with an additional area of 30,000 acres, making a total of 578,000 acres, there will be requirement for at least three sugar factories, or an initial development of about 24,000 acres. The necessity of expanding this area could be left to future developments.

NEVADA

No area has been allotted to Nevada for 1939. In 1938 the Spreckels Sugar Co. planted about 400 acres on the Humboldt project near Lovelock and made plans to expand this area to between 2,000 and 3,000 acres for 1939, but were advised that if this were to be done it would be necessary to make a corresponding reduction in sugar-beet acreage allotted to California. It is now understood that the company will limit its area in the vicinity of Lovelock to about 1,250 acres. This district could well support a factory which would require an initial development of about 7,000 acres.

On the Newlands project, Nevada, a sugar factory was erected in 1910 and operated until 1928, when the factory was abandoned because of the damage to sugar beets caused by the white fly. A blight-resistant seed has been developed and the Newlands project now desires to resume the production of sugar beets and has made a request that it be allotted an area of 10,000 acres.

OREGON

On the Owyhee project a factory has recently been constructed at Nyssa and the allotment for 1939 is 16,322 acres. The irrigable area of this project will be approximately 100,000, and, with the adjoining Vale project, brings the total to 130,000, which could well support two additional factories with an initial development of 7,000 acres each, or 14,000 acres.

WASHINGTON

The production of sugar beets was started several years ago on the Yakima project in Washington, but had to be abandoned because of blight resulting from the white fly. This difficulty has now been overcome and a factory is now operating to Toppenish, on the Wapato (Indian) division of the project, with an allotment of 14,310 acres in 1939. The success of sugar-beet production on the Yakima project warrants further expansion of the area, which could well support a second factory with an initial allotment of 10,000 acres.

WYOMING

The Goshen division of the North Platte project supplies beets to the factory at Torrington, which has been allotted 20,935 acres for 1939. Thus far no statement has been received as to the necessity of expanding this area, and until definite information has been received it will be assumed that this covers the immediate requirements, or that if there is need of some expansion to the area it could be taken care of out of the 6,000 acres of additional area estimated for the North Platte project in Nebraska.

Sugar beets on the Shoshone project are processed at Lovell, which has been allotted an acreage of 11,566 for 1939, which comprises an area on the Government project as well as the private projects lower down the valley. About 20 years ago the Great Western Sugar Co. purchased a factory site adjacent to the town of Powell but has never erected a factory. Sugar beets have been successfully grown on the Garland and Frannie divisions for the past 20 years or more. With the development of the Willwood division, which is making a good start in sugar-beet production, and the Heart Mountain division now under construction, this area could easily produce sufficient beets to warrant the construction of the factory at Powell, where an allotment of 12,000 acres should be made.

The Riverton project has made a good start in sugar-beet production and now ships beets to Worland, with a freight charge of 50 cents per ton to the grower. The Riverton area, comprising Government and private development, was allotted approximately 4,000 acres for 1938. It should be allotted an area of about 8,000 acres to justify the construction of a factory which would call for an additional acreage of 4,000 acres.

The Kendrick project is rapidly nearing completion; and if it is to be successfully developed, provision should be made for the production of sugar beets and the erection of a factory on the project which would mean an allotment of about 8,000 acres.

In this discussion it has been assumed that the areas allotted for the sugar-beet districts in Colorado, Idaho, and Utah, where sugar beets have been produced for a long period of years, are sufficient to cover immediate future needs. On the projects in these three States the Government either has or is now constructing storage works to furnish additional water to areas that have been developed largely by private capital. With this supplemental water available there will undoubtedly be some requirement for additional beet acreage, but just what this may amount to cannot be stated with any certainty at this time.

Based upon the above discussion the increased acreage herein suggested is as follows:

	Acres
Montana	15,000
Nebraska	30,000
Nevada	17,000
Oregon	14,000
Washington	10,000
Wyoming	24,000
Total	110,000

Very truly yours,

JOHN C. PAGE, Commissioner.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that response lengthy?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was going to summarize it.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. I think the matter is so important that the letter ought to be read.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is one of the most important phases of the problem.

In this letter Mr. Page indicated that 15,000 additional acres could be profitably employed in the growing of sugar beets in the State of Montana; 30,000 acres in the State of Nebraska, for which the senior Senator from Nebraska very ably spoke on the 23d of March when the bill was under consideration in this body; and 17,000 acres in the State of Nevada, on a reclamation project already under water, ready and capable of producing sugar beets for an American market which the American producer does not fill. And yet because of the lack of the amendments contained in this measure no allocation can be made to the State of Nevada or to the other States I am now referring to.

In Oregon profitable use could be made of 14,000 acres of land which was made ready for the production of sugar beets by the expenditures authorized by Congress in the development of reclamation projects. In the State of Washington, 10,000 acres. In the State of Wyoming, 24,000 acres.

Mr. President, in the State of Wyoming there is a project known as the Riverton project, the original appropriations for which were made on the motion of my distinguished predecessor, former Senator John B. Kendrick. While he was serving in this body arrangements were being made to bring about a condition which would enable the construction of a sugar factory upon that project. The representatives of Wyoming in this body and in the House ever since have been eager to bring about a condition that would make possible the construction of that factory. The land is there; the water is there; the Government put the water on the land; the farmers are ready to produce the sugar beets, and the consuming market in the United States is ready to purchase the product, and yet, because of the lack of these amendments, the allocation will not be made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Thus far the Senator has confined his inventory to the western area. I know he will not disagree with me, but on the contrary will welcome the additional testimony that we have an eastern sugar-beet area in which precisely the same opportunities for expansion exist, and in which we find ourselves limited, handicapped, and frequently almost ruined by the attitude of the Department of Agriculture in respect to the administration of the law. One of the great sugar-beet factories of Michigan announced that it could not open this year because of the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture. Subsequently it announced that it would undertake to negotiate an arrangement under which it might open. We confront precisely the same situation in the East which the Senator describes in the West; and I hope the Senator will feel, as he proceeds, that he has our hearty accord in the observations he has submitted.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am very happy that the Senator from Michigan has made this contribution, because I have not gathered the figures with respect to the expansion in the eastern beet area. I do know that not only in Michigan, but in Ohio and in other States, there is the same need for allocations which cannot be made because under the law, unless it is amended, so large a proportion of our market will be given to Cuba.

SUGAR PRODUCERS OF UNITED STATES NOT CALLED ON TO FURTHER CONTRIBUTE TO REHABILITATION OF CUBA

The contention is made that the allocation to Cuba, to the detriment of the domestic producer, is a proper one in order to prevent disaster in Cuba. Mr. President, I think it can be said without fear of denial by any person that the representatives of the cane- and beet-sugar producing areas of continental United States have made their contributions toward the stabilization of Cuba. We submitted to the arrangement in the Jones-Costigan Act. We submitted to the arrangement in the act of 1937. We are now asking only for a modification in order that the definite progressive decline of the return to producers may be halted. We have not undertaken to lay an embargo upon the production of Cuban sugar; but there is a circumstance which has not been considered by any of those who are attacking the proposed amendments to the bill passed by the Senate. That consideration is that the beet-producing areas of the United States—the eastern area for which the distinguished Senator from Michigan speaks, and the western area, for which the distinguished Senator from Colorado, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, the distinguished Senator from Montana, and others have been speaking—are upon an individual human economy, because the sugar beets are produced for the most part by individual farmers on family-sized farms. As the Senator from Florida pointed out earlier in the afternoon, the sugar economy in Cuba is a corporate economy. It is not the individual citizen of Cuba who receives the benefit from the protection which is being extended to the Cuban area.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator ought to add that while Cuba is on a corporate economy, the corporations are in the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator state the aggregate of the acreages submitted by Mr. Page for the various States?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's question, I am just now proceeding to answer it. I have in my hand a complete catalog of the corporations organized in the United States to raise sugarcane in Cuba.

Mr. NORRIS. That was not the question I last propounded. The Senator's statement answers the first suggestion I made. I want to hear it, of course. The Senator gave a synopsis of the letter of Mr. Page, from the Bureau of Reclamation. In that letter Mr. Page gave the acreages in various States not now devoted to the raising of sugar beets, but which are being prepared for that purpose. He did not give the aggregate acreage.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No. That information was not in the letter. I did not ask him for those figures, but they are available.

Mr. NORRIS. To obtain the aggregate for the States mentioned, all we have to do is to add up the figures which the Senator has given. I did not take down the figures. I was wondering whether or not the Senator had added them. My recollection is that the figures totaled about 110,000 acres.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Nebraska does not contend that that is the total of all the acreage in the West?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is only the acreage on the reclamation projects.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not even that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. We have many, many acres in Colorado, especially in the San Luis Valley, which farmers would like to devote to raising sugar beets.

Mr. NORRIS. If the same situation exists in the other States mentioned as exists in my own State, with which I am familiar, the figures of acreages given by Mr. Page, in my judgment, are very much too low. I do not mean that the acreages I have in mind could be prepared in 1 year. However, preparations are being made on the various projects in my State which, when completed, will eventually double the acreage given by Mr. Page.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The total acreage on the reclamation projects now ready for beets, but for which no allocation is made, is 110,000 acres. There are many more acres outside the reclamation projects in the United States which are adapted to growing sugar beets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. And the farmers want to grow them.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They emphatically desire to grow them, as the Senator from Colorado suggests.

SOME UNITED STATES CAPITAL INVESTMENTS IN CUBAN SUGAR

Mr. President, the Department of Commerce, in a publication entitled "American Direct Investments in Foreign Countries for 1936" makes the statement:

> Dominant among American investments in the West Indies were those in Cuba, with $666,000,000 out of a total of $753,000,000. * * * Sugar plantations and centrals, of which one always thinks when investments are mentioned, accounted for only $240,000,000 of the total and were second to public utility and transportation enterprises.

Two hundred and forty million dollars of American capital exported to Cuba to be invested in the raising of sugarcane to make sugar to be sold in the United States. As I pointed out a moment ago, practically all the production is carried on by corporations, and the benefits do not pass to the workers, but to those who have invested in companies.

The distinction I am making is that the great need in America today is such an arrangement of our economic system that the family-sized farm and the individual human worker shall receive primary consideration. The consideration which we are extending when we take into consideration what is happening in Cuba goes primarily to the corporations which exploit the workers on the Cuban plantations.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to read all of the statement to which I have referred, but here are some of the corporations:

Cuban Atlantic Sugar Co., a Delaware corporation.
Francisco Sugar Co., a New Jersey corporation.
Central Cuba Sugar Co., a New York corporation.
The Cuba Co., a New Jersey corporation.
The New Niquero Sugar Co., a New York corporation.
The Punta Alegre Sugar Co., a Delaware corporation—
And so on, through the list.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

> Exactly what portion of the Cuban production of sugar is owned or controlled by Americans is difficult to establish. However, it is ordinarily understood in the sugar trade that at least 70 percent of the output is controlled by Americans.
>
> The United States Department of Commerce in its publication American Direct Investments in Foreign Countries—1936, makes the following statement:
> "Dominant among American investments in the West Indies were those in Cuba, with $666,000,000 out of a total of $753,000,000. Even that total, which gave Cuba second rank among the countries of the world in the total direct investments, was $253,000,000 below the 1929 estimate. Sugar plantations and centrals, of which one always thinks when investments in Cuba are mentioned, accounted for only $240,000,000 of the total and were second to public-utility and transportation enterprises.
> "As late as 1928 American interests in Cuban sugar were privately estimated, after careful study, at $600,000,000 (Jenks, Leland H., Our Cuban Colony, p. 284. New York, 1928). The Commerce Department's 1929 estimate of $544,000,000 included $55,000,000 of preferred stock and $125,000,000 of bonds, debentures, and notes. In the process of reorganizing, which started about 1930, preferred stock was reduced to about $25,000,000 and bonds to $55,000,000. Furthermore, that process involved the loss of a large part of the previous equity interests. Most of the sugar companies had been reorganized by the end of 1936, and further drastic reductions in the stated value of their securities are not to be anticipated in the near future. Other investments in agriculture did not change greatly."

The foregoing information concerning American Sugar companies operating in Cuba is derived from Farr & Co.'s Manual of Sugar Companies—1938.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When the bill was under consideration in 1937 it was my feeling that there was a very serious defect in the measure, in that it did not recognize the distinction between the corporate economy and the individual economy.

ENCOURAGE FAMILY-SIZED FARM

Corporations, of course, are necessary in order to develop the resources of the United States and of the world; they should be encouraged; but when 11,000,000 people are out of employment and when farm areas are in danger of great disaster by reason of inability to produce at a profit, the primary need of statesmanship is to do what can be done to encourage the domestic economy which is based upon the family-sized farm.

Believing as I did that the benefit payments in large sums going to huge corporations constituted a great danger, I offered an amendment which would have provided that no benefits should be paid in excess of $50,000 to any one grower of sugar in a single year. It was impossible to secure consideration for that amendment; circumstances were such that it was not adopted; but the need was there, because the purpose of the act in question was to encourage the producer who was making a home for a family and for children; it was for the farmer who was developing citizens of the United States. Sometimes I think we are inclined to pay too much heed to developing resources for the sake of developing the resources alone without regard to the effect upon the human beings whose lives are in the balance as the result of it. That is the chief cause of our unemployment problem.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question there?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. To illustrate the point which the Senator is making, we are allowed to produce 50,000 tons of sugar in the Everglades region of Florida. We could produce 150,000 tons and perhaps 500,000 tons. To produce the 50,000 tons now allowed requires the labor of 3,000 persons who are paid about $2 a day, every cent of which is spent in the United States for articles made in the United States. If we were allocated to produce, say, 150,000 tons—and remember that Florida alone consumes that much—we could take 6,000 more American citizens off the relief rolls and give them jobs for life. That is the problem with which we are confronted there. On the other hand, the laborers in Cuba, I believe, get 56 cents a day, or perhaps 62 cents a day, for their labor. They spend none of it in the United States, but it all goes to American capital.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the reason why I am urging upon the Department of Agriculture and upon Members of Congress in the House and in the Senate that they devote their energies to the enactment of the legislation to which I have referred at the present session.

I was talking about payments in excess of $10,000 to producers of sugar. Let me say that the growing of sugarcane often lends itself to large establishments; there can be no doubt about that. It is not always possible to grow sugarcane upon a family-sized farm. The problem of cultivation is such that large tracts of land may be operated. But that is not the case with sugar beets. Sugar beets are usually grown upon areas as small as 40 acres or 80 acres or 160 acres. The significance of the point I am making now will be understood when I say to the Senate that conditional payments of $10,000 or more in the beet-sugar area constitute only 6 percent of all the benefit payments which were made to the producers of sugar beets.

BENEFIT PAYMENTS, 1934 CROPS, ACCORDING TO REPORT OF SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE, JULY 25, 1938

In Louisiana 48.3 percent of the payments were in excess of $10,000.

In Florida payments in excess of $10,000 constituted 99.3 percent of all the benefit payments which were made.

In Hawaii 100 percent of all the benefit payments were in excess of $10,000.

In Puerto Rico 74.6 percent of all payments were in excess of $10,000; and the curious fact about Puerto Rico is that there has been a law upon the statute books for years prohibiting a corporation from owning more than 500 acres of land. That law has not been enforced, though the Department of the Interior is endeavoring to enforce it, and a suit is now pending in the court to bring that about. However, the effect is that the corporate economy is the economy in Puerto Rico and that corporations benefit principally from the allocation of sugar-producing areas to that island.

Mr. Gruening, who is the head of the Territorial Division of the Department of the Interior, was testifying before the Appropriations Committee when the second deficiency bill was under consideration, and there was a short colloquy between himself and the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], when the subject under discussion was the benefit which Puerto Rico derived from the Sugar Act. Senator ADAMS then said:

> And the $10,000,000 which goes to Puerto Rico for benefit payments to sugar has benefited the people there.
>
> Mr. GRUENING. I doubt if it helps the people very much.
>
> Senator ADAMS. I beg your pardon.
>
> Mr. GRUENING. That was paid out in the form of dividends; it did not help the Puerto Rican people very much.
> Senator ADAMS. Well, I am merely citing that as amounts of money that went to Puerto Rico, and $10,000,000 did go in the form of benefit payments on sugar.
>
> Senator TOWNSEND. How is the $10,000,000 disposed of; who gets the money?
> Mr. GRUENING. I recall that 2 years ago the largest benefit payment went to the Royal Bank in Canada, and the next largest benefit payment went to the National City Bank in New York.

That, Mr. President, is the reason I say that we must bear in mind that we are dealing with two different economies, not only in the United States but in the whole world.

THIS GOVERNMENT FOR MEN AND THEIR FAMILIES

Governments were created by men to protect the rights of men. This Government was established by men who believe that a democratic government could be brought into existence which would serve the popular welfare, a government which would "secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," as the preamble of the Constitution recites. But here we have such a situation that individual farmers living upon individual farms are deprived of the opportunity to develop their farms and dispose of their product to the American market which is waiting to buy the product because, we are told, that to do so would result in disaster in Cuba, although the benefits of our policy go not to the people of Cuba nor to the people of Puerto Rico but to the private economy which is exploiting those insular areas.

Mr. President, it seems to me to be perfectly clear, with these facts and circumstances before us, that there can be no escape from the consideration of this proposal at the present session of Congress.

Again, Mr. President, I say, as I said at the outset, I hope that the executive departments of the Government will pay heed to the expression of the people of America made here today when the naval appropriations bill was under consideration, that it is their desire that the Government shall exercise its greatest effort, all its power, to see that the American market is protected for the American producer. There can be no escape from this policy. I say, Mr. President, if it is not done now, it will be done some time. It should be done now, because the need is great and only along this line can we make progress toward the solution of the problem of unemployment and toward the solution of the problem of agriculture which now, after 6 years, we all acknowledge has not been solved.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, certain tables and a list of benefit payments which I have compiled.

There being no objection, the tables and list were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Proportion of total payments under sugar program made to $10,000 producers and proportion of total production of sugar grown on farms of such producers

	1934 proportion of—		1935 proportion of—

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had not intended to consume any of the time of the Senate in discussing the subjects which were the basis of the address of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]; but, inasmuch as it is too late in the day to call the calendar or to do anything else, I wish very briefly to put in the RECORD some facts with reference to the two subjects discussed by the Senator. In one case the discussion may be purely academic; in fact, in both cases it may be, because the first subject to which the Senator from Wyoming referred has already been disposed of.

I think the discussion in the newspapers and on the floor of the Senate growing out of the purchase by the President of a small quantity of corned beef for the Navy is out of all proportion to its importance.

Last year there were 65,000,000 head of cattle in the United States; and it would not have required more than 30 head of the 65,000,000 to produce the amount of corned beef that constituted the small purchase of 48,000 pounds bought by the President for the Navy. Seventy-nine million pounds of this article per year are shipped into this country from Argentina; 48,000 pounds is a very insignificant proportion of 79,000,000 pounds. There was nothing in this purchase which violated either the spirit or the letter of the so-called "Buy American" Act passed in 1933.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to inquire as to the size of the 30 cattle. It seems to me they would have to be pretty good-sized cattle. A beef will butcher out about 50 percent, and then it is necessary to take out the bone, which would be another 50 percent. Forty-eight thousand pounds divided by 30 would make the cattle weigh 1,600 pounds apiece.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator from Colorado realizes that I was not undertaking to be precise and exact as to the number of cattle. What I was trying to indicate was the insignificant number. Earlier in the day I said "30 or 40." If each cow weighed a thousand pounds, it would not take more than 48 cattle to produce 48,000 pounds of corned beef.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If a cow weighs a thousand pounds, not all of it can be put into the can.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. How many cattle would it take to make 48,000 pounds of corned beef?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should estimate that it would take about 200.

Mr. BARKLEY. What proportion of 65,000,000 is 200? So, regardless of the exact number of cows it would take, the illustration I was attempting to make is still, I think, apt. The number of cattle required to produce this amount of corned beef compared to the total number of cattle in the United States is insignificant and inconsequential.

Mr. HATCH rose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator from New Mexico wish to interrupt me?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the discussion has gotten into such big figures that the Senator from New Mexico thinks he had better proceed a little later.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know how accurate and expert the Senator from New Mexico is on figures. The point is that this whole thing, whether it is a tempest in a teapot or in a can, is out of all proportion to its importance so far as the cattle industry of the country is concerned.

There is nothing in the purchase of this particular quantity of corned beef which violates either the spirit or the letter of the law. The truth is that this product is not produced in this country in sufficient quantities to supply any appreciable demand. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] today called attention to the fact that this product from Brazil is consumed in the Senate Restaurant. I have been informed that a search was made in Washington for some domestically produced corned beef, and in the entire city of Washington only one can could be found; and it was a sort of exhibit, I think, in a museum.

I have here a copy of a telegram sent to the President on day before yesterday by Mr. B. R. Albin, president of the Independent Merchants' Association of Montana, which is a cattle-raising section of the country:

President FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
Washington, D. C.:

We have just made an investigation among many retailers and wholesale distributors regarding canned beef, and our findings are that the canned beef offered to the public is all from South America. Also found it practically impossible to purchase any United States canned beef in our territory. Am giving you this information because of the controversy that has arisen over the small purchase you have made of canned beef from South America. It is particularly interesting to note that even in this western cattle-producing country we are only able to buy South American canned beef.

B. R. ALBIN,
President, Independent Merchants' Association of Montana.

Mr. President, I have here a brief connotation of facts and figures with respect to this subject. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to give them. I ask unanimous consent at this point in my address to insert in the RECORD a statement with reference to canned corned beef for the Navy which deals with the question of price, with the question of the Buy American Act, with the production of canned corned beef in the United States, and also with other facts pertinent to the controversy which has arisen over the purchase of this small quantity of canned corned beef.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

CANNED CORNED BEEF FOR THE NAVY

PRICE

1. South American canned corned beef is available to the Navy at a much lower cost than canned corned beef made on a special-order basis in the United States.

2. The low bid of the Argentine Meat Producers' Cooperative to supply 48,000 pounds of such canned meat to the Navy was only 9.73 cents per pound, ex-duty, as compared with the lowest domestic bid of 23.61 cents.

3. Award of the contract to the lowest domestic bidder would have cost the taxpayers more than two and one-half times the expenditure for the Argentine product.

THE BUY AMERICAN ACT

1. This act never was intended to force the Government to purchase domestic products regardless of cost.

2. The letter and spirit of that act have been carried out faithfully by providing a differential of 100 percent in favor of domestic products on purchases under $100 and a differential of at least 25 percent on purchases in excess of $100 as a guide in making Government purchases.

3. Even with the customs duty (which goes into the Treasury) added to the low Argentine bid to supply a small quantity of canned corned beef to the Navy, making the price 15.73 cents per pound, the differential amounts to more than 50 percent, twice as much as the differential used as a guide under the Buy American Act for purchases over $100.

4. The proposed amendment to the Navy appropriation bill is in substance a proposal to amend the Buy American Act and should be considered as such, rather than in connection with a particular appropriation bill.

QUALITY

1. It is no reflection upon the quality of our cattle that we cannot afford to use them for canned corned beef.

2. In the United States all the higher grades of beef are sold at relatively high prices in the fresh-meat market; other grades are used principally in ground-meat products, except that occasionally they are used to fill Government orders for canned corned beef.

3. In South America, on the other hand, good cuts of beef, as well as trimmings, are used for corning and canning, since the demand for South American fresh, chilled, or frozen beef does not use up available supplies.

4. The use of higher-grade American cuts to produce corned beef of a quality equal to that offered by the South American packers would result in a further substantial increase in price.

OTHER CONSIDERATIONS

1. Since there is no commercial production of canned corned beef in the United States, any such beef supplied by domestic packers to the Government from plants in this country must be made at relatively high cost on the special-order basis.

2. Without helping American cattle producers, the proposed amendment would harm our trade relations with Argentina and other countries.

3. Government purchases of canned corned beef will help to provide South American countries with purchasing power for American products needed or desired in those countries, without detriment to American cattle producers or the meat-packing industry.

Mr. BARKLEY. I also desire to call attention to the fact that the exports to the Republic of Argentina of American products, made up of agricultural as well as industrial products, have materially increased since 1931.

In 1931 we shipped to Argentina $52,000,000 worth of American products.

In 1932 we shipped only $31,000,000 worth.

From 1932 the amount of our exports gradually increased until last year we shipped $86,000,000 worth, and the year before $94,000,000 worth. In fact, from 1934 to 1937, inclusive, the amount of imports from Argentina exceeded our exports in the following figures: 1935, $16,000,000; 1936, $8,000,000; 1937, $44,000,000.

But in 1938 our exports of American products over and above all imports from Argentina amounted to forty-six-million-and-odd dollars.

Having read these figures, I ask that the entire table be inserted in the RECORD at this point, giving the figures from 1924 down to 1938, both inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

United States-Argentine trade

[United States official statistics in dollars, United States currency]

	United States exports to Argentina	United States imports from Argentina	United States balance of trade with Argentina
1924	$117,093,000	$75,298,000	+$44,795,000
1925	148,759,000	80,170,000	+68,589,000

1935	49,374,000	65,408,000	−16,034,000
1936	56,910,000	65,882,000	−8,972,000
1937	94,183,000	138,940,000	−44,757,000
1938	86,772,000	40,707,000	+46,065,000

Mr. BARKLEY. I put those figures in the RECORD to show that we cannot look at our trade relations with Argentina or any other nation purely from the standpoint of corned beef. We must take into consideration our entire agricultural and industrial situation. When we have in Argentina a market for a large quantity of our agricultural and industrial products, employment is provided for American labor. Without such export markets we certainly should have no employment for those who are engaged in the production of the exportable merchandise or the exportable agricultural products; without those markets men would be either on relief or seeking employment which is enjoyed by other American citizens.

The truth of the matter is, as I said a while ago in interrupting the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]—for whose sincerity and ability I have the profoundest respect—that for a number of years, practically since the Spanish-American War, American beef producers have not engaged to any degree whatever in the commercial production of this particular product. The cuts of beef that are ordinarily used in the production of corned beef are sold in this country more advantageously and at a greater profit for use in the manufacture of other beef products. It may be descending from the sublime to the ridiculous, but the truth is that out of this particular part of the carcass of a beef in this country the packers do not make corned beef, but they make hamburgers and "hot dogs," which is a misnomer, I will say, because it is no longer "hot dog," if it ever was; it is "hot cow." [Laughter.] The type of beef product which in Argentina and other countries goes into corned beef, in this country goes into the manufacture of hamburgers and "hot dogs," and they are sold more advantageously; the demand for them is infinitely larger and the profits are greater. Therefore there is no inducement for the American producer to use this particular cut of the beef in the manufacture of corned beef.

The Senator from Nebraska had brought to the floor of the Senate awhile ago a can of this corned beef which he obtained in the restaurant, and the label on the can shows that it was produced in Brazil for Armour & Co., whose home is Chicago. It is manufactured in Brazil; it says on the can that it is manufactured in Brazil; it is a product of Brazil, not made in Brazil by a branch of Armour & Co., as I understand, but made in Brazil by some Argentine manufacturer for Armour & Co., just as a hat manufacturer in Bridgeport, Conn., or somewhere else in New England may make a certain brand of hats for B. Weille & Sons, in Paducah, or for the Rodes-Rapier Co., in Louisville, or for any other clothing merchant in the United States.

Mr. President, I merely wish to reiterate that the President did not violate either the spirit or the letter of the law which is in effect. By the way, there has been established in all the departments a regulation that whenever any articles purchased which the "Buy American" law says must be produced in this country amount to less than $100, they will not be purchased from any foreign producer unless the difference in price is more than 100 percent, and in quantities over $100, the standard by which they will decide is a minimum of 25 percent. So the difference would have to be not less than 25 and ranging up to 100 percent, and even above 100, before the department purchasing a quantity of goods would decide to buy an imported article instead of a domestically manufactured article.

Mr. President, sugar has also been the subject of discussion by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator from Kentucky leaves the question of beef, I desire to ask whether he had seen two articles in the New York Times, one under date of May 16, and the other under date of May 15, one by Arthur Krock, on this subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. I read the article by Mr. Krock, and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] yesterday inserted it in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. Before I leave that subject, and in that connection, I wish also to insert in the RECORD a copy of a letter written yesterday by Mr. Sumner Welles, Under Secretary of State, to the President, in which he incorporates a telegram received by the Argentine Ambassador to the United States from his Government, in which it is stated that the publication in some of the newspapers that this particular product was subsidized in Argentina is incorrect, showing that there is no governmental subsidy in connection with the production of the article. I ask that a copy of the letter be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 17, 1939.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: With reference to the canned-beef question, I have received this morning from the Argentine Ambassador the text of the telegram he has just received from his Government, which I believe may be of interest to you and which I quote in translation as follows:

"With reference to Your Excellency's telegram, the Buenos Aires newspapers have today published an official statement of the Argentine Ministry of Agriculture denying the allegations of Senator O'MAHONEY.

"The department of agriculture believes it desirable that notwithstanding the statements in this regard already made by your embassy, Your Excellency, referring to the said official statement, should explain to the Government of the United States that the Argentine Corporation of Meat Producers, although initiated by the state, is not an institution which receives any subsidy from the Government and is solely an organization formed exclusively by meat producers without interference of any kind on the part of the State and with a capital contributed solely by the stock raisers themselves and that in the activities of the corporation there take part only the stock raisers classified by locality and category.

"The Ministry of Agriculture believes, a belief which is shared by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, that this clarification should terminate the discussion of this question definitively."

Believe me,

Faithfully yours,

SUMNER WELLES.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I shall not take up time discussing the able address of the Senator from Wyoming on the subject of sugar, because I am not from a sugar-producing State, and except as I have gathered information as a member of the Committee on Finance in connection with sugar legislation which has come before the committee, I would not in any way pose here as an expert on the subject of sugar.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The statement I made to the Committee on Appropriations with respect to the Argentine low bidder was not that the company was subsidized, but that it was a Government-encouraged cooperative, sponsored by the Government, and the facts with respect to that are already in the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was not alluding to any statement of the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That statement became very current.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was a statement in the press that the company in question was subsidized by the Argentine Government, and it is that statement which the letter of the Under Secretary refutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I think it fair to say that, in my opinion, the preponderance of the evidence shows that the quality of the corned beef canned in Argentina is superior to that canned in this country; that there is no canned corned beef produced in this country except on special orders. When the packers have a surplus of that which they have produced on special orders, then it is purchaseable in retail stores.

That there is a wide divergence of price, it seems to me, also must be admitted. Further, the Navy Department and the President, in agreeing to this purchase—I understand the President was consulted—acted within the departmental regulations to which the Senator from Kentucky has referred, permitting foreign purchases when the difference in price is in excess of 25 percent.

It seems to me the sole and only question is whether we ought to adopt in this country a policy of purchasing domestically produced products, particularly food products, as in this instance, in our own country, regardless of price. That seems to be the sole and only issue which can be raised, in view of the facts which the Senator has presented, and which I thought ought to be corroborated by me, since I heard the testimony.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the contribution of the Senator. There are two or three elements which enter into this matter. In the first place, the product is not produced in this country. The question whether we want to pay a sufficiently high price to induce its production here, regardless of how high the price may be, is one of considerable importance.

In the next place, the difference between the domestic price and the price at which this particular consignment was purchased was 250 percent—not 100 percent but 250 percent, or practically so.

The purchase of this commodity, not only by the Navy Department but by our people, if they desire to purchase it and use it—and they use it to the extent of 79,000,000 pounds—affords to the people of Argentine that much purchasing power with which to buy American exports whose production gives employment to American labor.

Mr. WALSH. The facts have been presented; but I think I ought to say that personally I feel very strongly that the Government, when it makes purchases, should give every possible benefit to the domestic producer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree entirely with that statement. In connection with the remarks of the Senator that Argentine corned beef is superior to ours——

Mr. WALSH. I think the evidence is overwhelming in that direction.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it should be stated that that is no reflection upon the American cattle grower, or the American packer, or the American merchandiser.

Mr. WALSH. Unquestionably that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. It comes about because of the fact that all the better cuts of American beef are sold in the fresh meat market at fairly high prices, and it would not be economically sound to use those better cuts of American beef in the production of corned beef. The beef of inferior quality which otherwise would go into production of corned beef, is used in the manufacture of other things, which bring higher prices.

In Argentina exactly the reverse is true. They do not consume domestically all of their better cuts of beef, and therefore they use some of them in the manufacture of corned beef, mixing them with the inferior cuts, and on the average a better quality of beef is produced.

Mr. WALSH. The evidence confirms all the Senator has said, and it is detailed in the record.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have a memorandum confirming the sugar program which has been in effect by the administration now in office, and I shall take but a moment to give some of the figures connected with the production, and the compensation which has come to American sugar producers.

In the 5-year period from 1909 to 1914, 485,000 acres were cultivated in sugar-producing beets and cane.

The average for the 5 years from 1929 to 1933 was 785,000 acres.

The average for the 5 years following the adoption of the sugar program, which has been in force under this administration, was 798,000 acres.

In 1938 there were 931,000 acres cultivated in beets and cane producing sugar in the United States.

The farm value of the sugar produced in the first 5-year period was $26,000,000 plus. In the next period from 1929 to 1933 it was $54,000,000 plus. In the next 5-year period from 1934 to 1938 it was $60,000,000 plus. In 1938 it was $72,000,000 plus. In other words, the farm value has increased nearly 300 percent from 1914 to 1938.

The average income per ton on this sugar in the first period was $5.50. In the next period, from 1929 to 1933, it was $6.09. In the next period, from 1934 to 1938, it was $6.79; and in 1938 it was $6.30 per ton.

I now wish to show the increase in acreage harvested and farm value of sugar beets under the sugar program as compared with the principal farm crops—corn, wheat, and cotton. There was an increase of 485,000 acres in sugar beets, 101,000,000 acres in corn, 48,000,000 acres in wheat, and 32,000,000 acres in cotton.

As I said a while ago, the farm value of the increased production of sugar was $26,000,000. The value of the increased production of corn in that same period was $1,533,000,000; of wheat, $593,000,000; and of cotton, $783,000,000.

In 1938, in the case of sugar, the farm value had gone up from $26,000,000 to $70,000,000. In the case of corn it had gone down from $1,533,000,000, notwithstanding the period which it covered, to $1,287,000,000.

The farm value of wheat, although the acreage had increased from 48,000,000 to 70,000,000, had declined in that period from $593,000,000 to $573,000,000.

Although the acreage in cotton had declined from 1932 to 1935, the value of cotton remained almost stationary. In the first period, from 1909 to 1913, the value was $783,000,000, and in 1938 it was approximately $786,000,000.

I mention these figures in order to show that the policy of the administration as affecting sugar was intended gradually to stimulate and help the domestic-sugar producer.

The amount of income per acre, and the total income, and the percentage of income for sugar under the program which has been in progress under this administration were greater than for wheat or corn or cotton.

So what the administration has tried to do, and what it is trying to do, is to work out and to administer the act which Congress adopted in a way that will inure to the benefit of the producers of domestic sugar, having in consideration the fact that we do not produce sufficient to supply our domestic demands, and having in view the fact that our entire trade program has been related and coordinated in an attempt to bring about the sale of our products in other countries, while we are at the same time undertaking in a fair and reasonable way to limit their importations into the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the figures given by the Senator from Kentucky are, of course, correct. I think they speak volumes. They show what the Senator says they do; they show that progress has been made, and that the Department of Agriculture has acted in a sympathetic way toward the producers of sugar. That is all true. Nevertheless, mainly because of the laws passed by Congress, it seems to me, there has been discrimination, rather violent discrimination, against the producers of sugar, so far as beets are concerned at least, that being the only part of the industry with which I am familiar.

Notwithstanding the figures the fact is that there are thousands of American citizens occupying farms, not corporations such as those which produce sugar in Cuba, but American farmers who have the land, with the best of soil, and water which has been put on the land in many cases by irrigation projects established by funds which came from the Federal Government, and those farmers are prohibited from raising sugar beets. They have been clamoring for the last year or two for the right to do so, in view of the fact that they are so well equipped to produce sugar beets. But they are denied that privilege.

I do not say that the Department of Agriculture could help in that situation, but I think Congress could. I think we could pass a law which would help the situation materially. In other words, there are thousands of acres adapted to produce sugar beets, and the farmers are ready to produce them. But they are denied the privilege of doing so on their own property because of the quota system. They are denied that privilege because we are going to take so much sugar here and there from foreign countries, which seems to me to be absolutely unjust, illogical, and contrary to the best human instincts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whether the Department of Agriculture or Congress is responsible for that situation I am not going to attempt to say at the moment. Of course I sympathize, as we all do, with the desire of any farmer to produce the things that his land will produce most advantageously. Yet it is true that while there are 6,000,000 farms in the United States there are only 100,000 of them on which sugar beets and sugarcane are grown. The combined number of farms on which sugar beets and sugarcane are grown is 100,000, compared with a total of 6,000,000 farms in the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming that we have to find a market also for our wheat, corn, and cotton for every additional acre that is cultivated for sugar beets or cane, 3 acres of cotton, 3 acres of corn, and 6 acres of wheat must be denied the right to produce those commodities because we have no market in foreign countries, by reason of lack of purchasing power for our corn and cotton and wheat.

Mr. NORRIS. We are trying to reduce the production of wheat and corn and cotton, and if those who want to raise sugar beets and who are capable of doing so are permitted to raise them, it would have that very effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not altogether, because you cannot substitute 6 acres of wheat and 3 acres of corn and 3 acres of cotton.

Mr. NORRIS. No; but we could assist in the very program that Congress and the Department of Agriculture are trying to carry out under the existing law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we all realize how difficult and delicate a problem it is to adjust the balance not only between sugar of all kinds but between the production of cane sugar and beet sugar. That is one of the most difficult matters with which the Finance Committee has to deal. I can say that from my own experience as a member of the committee. It took us weeks to try to work out the balance between the production of beet and cane sugar, and when we had finished it was more or less of an arbitrary balance which could not be exact, which could not be precise. The same thing applies to the various other crops when reduction of unsalable production is undertaken.

Mr. NORRIS. We are trying to reduce unsalable production; that is, we are trying to reduce production on the farm by offering various sorts of remedies to the farmer who will indulge in certain soil-conserving practices, to pay him by reason of loss occasioned by not planting on those acres which he would otherwise put into wheat or corn or cotton. We are engaged in that program. I think we are doing the very best we can. I am in favor of the program. If we were to permit every farmer who wants to, and who is properly equipped, to raise sugar beets, that would necessarily take a great deal of land out of production of corn and wheat and perhaps cotton. It would do more than that. It would have the effect of reducing the overproduction that we are trying to reduce, and at the same time increase the production of a necessary article of human diet, of which we do not and cannot produce sufficient to supply our own demand. That is admitted.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. President, I ask that the various tables and memoranda to which I have referred be inserted in the RECORD at this point; also a copy of a letter written by the President on the 18th of April 1939 to Representative MARVIN JONES, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture; also a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture to Representative JONES, dated January 24, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the matter referred to may be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDUM RE SUGAR PROGRAM

Recently the following basic questions have been asked with regard to the sugar program:

1. How much further shall we go in making sugar beets and sugarcane more profitable than other agricultural crops?

As the result of the protection given to producers under New Deal legislation, the acreage and average returns of mainland sugar-beet producers have been increased as follows:

	Acreage	Average income per ton	Farm value
Average, 1909–14	485,000	$5.50	$26,697,000
Average, 5 years preceding sugar program (1929–33)	785,000	6.09	54,249,000
Average 5 years following sugar program (1934–38)	798,000	6.79	60,428,000
1938 (estimated)	931,000	6.30	72,000,000

2. How much further shall we go in reducing our badly needed export markets for our surplus crops in order to expand the domestic sugar industry?

At the present time the act provides that in the administration of the quota system the supply of sugar made available to consumers shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole. If the act were to be amended to remove this limitation on the Secretary's power, our export market for agricultural crops would be curtailed. It has been calculated that each additional planted acre of sugar beets or sugarcane impairs our export market in an amount equal to the normal product of either 3 acres of corn, or cotton, or 6 acres of wheat. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics has estimated that the decline of our imports of Cuban sugar from 1928 to 1932 was accompanied by a reduction in the Cuban market for American farm products for more than 800,000 acres of land.

The astounding increase in acreage harvested and farm value of sugar beets, under the sugar program, as compared with the principal farm crops is shown in the following table:

	Acres harvested		Farm value		Percentage change 1909–13 to 1938
	1909–13	1938	1909–13	1938	Acreage	Farm value
	1,000 acres	1,000 acres			Per cent	Per cent
Sugar beets	485	931	$26,697,000	$70,814,000	+92	+165
Corn	101,103	91,792	1,533,961,000	1,287,746,000	−9	−16
Wheat	48,075	70,221	593,482,000	573,802,000	+46	−3
Cotton (lint)	32,948	25,346	783,011,000	786,344,000	−23	0

3. The necessity of providing sugar-beet acreage for reclamation and irrigation projects of the Federal Government has been raised. However, in only 2 years in its history has the sugar beet producing area produced its present quota. In 1 year the deficit was as much as 375,000 tons of sugar. This deficit took place despite a protection to the domestic sugar industry equivalent to an ad valorem tariff of over 200 percent. Consequently serious economic problems would be created in the other areas of sugar production supplying the United States market and our export markets would be further curtailed if our present sugar policy were to be changed merely because the sugar-beet area has been able to fill its quota in 1 year out of 5.

As the President has recently pointed out, the total burden of sugar legislation on consumers, if measured by the full difference between the unprotected price of sugar in world markets and the protected price in the United States, has been equivalent to the purchasing power of approximately 50 quarts of milk and 50 loaves of bread per annum for each family in the United States.

The protection accorded the sugar industry is primarily for the benefit of only about 100,000 farms in the United States on which sugar beets and sugarcane are grown, as compared with the 6,000,000 farms in the country.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT TO HON. MARVIN JONES, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

[Reproduced from the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 84, pp. 1566–1567, for use by the staff of the Sugar Division]

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 18, 1939.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: The three departments of the Government primarily concerned with the problems involved in the pending amendments to the Sugar Act have advised me of your courteous reference to them of S. 69 for expression of their views thereon. Since the proposed amendments raise grave governmental problems which transcend the specialized interests and functions of the individual departments concerned, I have been requested by them to set forth the basic position of the administration on the proposed amendments.

Prior to 1934 the sugar industry was suffering from unsatisfactory returns, and our exports to Cuba had declined to a disastrously low level. The legislation pertaining to sugar enacted by Congress in 1934, and revised and extended in 1937, and the reciprocal-trade agreement negotiated with Cuba in 1934 resulted not only in a substantial increase in the income of domestic sugar-beet and sugarcane growers and processors, but also in a gratifying increase in our export trade with Cuba. Between 1933 and 1937 our exports to Cuba of rice, wheat flour, lard, and other agricultural products were trebled and exports of manufactured articles were increased fourfold.

I am advised, however, that only a year and a half after exhaustive consideration by the Congress and the administration of the 1937 legislation, the sugar lobbyists, who, in order to justify their employment, must be professionally dissastisfied under any conditions, are pressing for drastic amendments to the act which would disrupt the balance established in the existing legislation as between the opposing interests of the various groups concerned; they would further burden consumers for the additional benefit of producers, seriously impair one of the principal markets for our export crops, and establish discriminations among various parts of the United States. Moreover, the proposed amendments would undermine the basis upon which the trade agreement with Cuba was negotiated and violate our treaty obligations under the International Sugar Agreement, approved by the Senate on December 20, 1937.

The first paragraph of the bill contains special exemptions from the acreage adjustments now required as a condition for payments under the act, that would operate primarily for the benefit of the large plantation companies in the mainland sugarcane area. Such exemptions would not only constitute a serious discrimination against the domestic insular areas, particularly the island of Puerto Rico, in which area a substantial adjustment of production this year is well under way, in compliance with the provisions of the act, but is also extremely unfair and unjust to the producers in all areas whose great sacrifices in prior years under former sugar programs are directly responsible for the favorable position enjoyed by sugar producers in the mainland cane area in recent years. It is unthinkable that plantation producers in the mainland sugarcane area should be relieved of any responsibility for their appropriate share of crop adjustment as a condition for payments.

The second amendment in S. 69 would unfortunately delete the present provision in the Sugar Act designed to protect the housewives of the Nation against sugar prices in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic industry. In recent years the total burden of sugar legislation on consumers, if measured by the full difference between the unprotected price of sugar in world markets and the protected price in the United States, has been equivalent to the purchasing power of approximately 50 quarts of milk and 50 loaves of bread per annum for each family in the United States.

The third amendment of S. 69 discriminates against two sections of the United States, Puerto Rico and Hawaii, by reducing their present shares of the total domestic quota and by denying those areas their proportionate shares of the large increase provided for in the bill for all domestic areas. The bill would thus create a colonialism of the Old World type in the form of an underprivileged American citizen living in these particular insular parts of the United States. The imperialistic nature of such discriminations against some of our own citizens becomes clear when it is realized that although the Congress could legally destroy the economy of its insular possessions through such discriminatory trade restrictions, the American citizens in those areas would possess no legal right to defend themselves against such actions by erecting trade barriers against products produced in the mainland.

The third amendment also proposes a severe reduction in the Cuban quota which would further curtail our shrunken markets for American agricultural exports at a time when Congress and the administration are struggling with measures to expand such markets.

Furthermore, our principal benefit to Cuba in our reciprocal-trade agreement of August 24, 1934, in return for over 400 duty concessions to American goods, was a duty reduction on Cuban sugar negotiated against the background of the quotas provided in the Jones-Costigan Act, upon the assumption on the part of the contracting parties that the quota basis would not be changed to Cuba's detriment. The reduction which this bill proposes to make in the Cuban quota is so inconsistent with the purposes of the trade agreement and the basis on which it was entered into that it seems at variance with our fundamental principles of fair play and fair dealing which we have been urging as essential to world economic recovery and world peace.

Under article 9 (a) of the international sugar agreement, we agreed to accept from the full-duty countries every year a quantity of sugar directly proportionate to the small share allotted on a historic basis to these countries under the Jones-Costigan Act in 1937. Under the proposed bill this proportion would be decreased. In addition to losing part of their basic quotas, the full-duty countries would lose under S. 69 the important reallocation of the Philippine dutiable sugar deficiency now provided for. The purpose of this provision in the Sugar Act of 1937 is to enlarge the foreign market for American exports.

Thus, the enactment of the bill S. 69 would be a serious threat to the future of the policy of improved relationships among the American republics, which has become so important and favorable a factor in our international relations in the past few years. We have been bending every effort to develop a vital program of inter-American cooperation. This program is becoming increasingly advantageous. It is earnestly believed that the Congress will not wish to impede its progress.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

LETTER TO CHAIRMAN JONES MADE PUBLIC BY AGRICULTURE

The Department of Agriculture today made public the following letter to Chairman JONES, of the House Agriculture Committee:

JANUARY 24, 1939.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. JONES: In response to your request of January 19 for certain data with respect to some of the questions raised in a recent congressional discussion about the program under the Sugar Act of 1937, we are pleased to submit the following information:

Briefly summarized, criticism of the sugar program in recent congressional discussion relates almost entirely to an assumed inadequacy of income for sugar-beet producers under the sugar program and the fear that the small reduction in the duty on Cuban sugar from 0.90 to 0.75 cent per pound, raw value, now under consideration in connection with the pending trade-agreement revision, may further curtail such income. It may, therefore, be useful to summarize the elements of protection and benefits for the sugar industry provided by the Congress in the Sugar Act of 1937. The prior sugar legislation of 1934 was of a similar nature. The four outstanding elements in the sugar program are as follows:

1. Limitation through quotas on the admission of foreign and insular sugars, which limitations have been fully effective and restrictive each year since 1934, and limitations on marketings of the mainland sugar-cane and sugar-beet industries which have been nominal since 1935 because production was generally below the quotas for such areas established in the legislation.

2. Limitation through quotas on the imports of liquid sugars from Cuba and Santo Domingo and outright prohibition or embargo on the importations of such sugars from other foreign countries in excess of 10 short tons.

The effect of these quota limitations has been to maintain a differential in the price of sugar in the United States above the price of unprotected sugars (seaboard basis) and in favor of domestic production of 2.17 cents per pound in 1937 and 1.80 cents in 1938, equal to an ad valorem protection of 168 percent and 159 percent, respectively, not including the Federal payments to growers.

3. Federal conditional payments to producers of 60 cents per 100 pounds of recoverable sugar, pursuant to title III of the act, which, on the basis of average yields of beets in the United States, equal about $24 per acre. For the 1937 and 1938 crops of sugar beets, payments were made under the act on the total production of the growers without any limitation of acreage or production. For the 1937 crop $16,966,000 has been paid out to date, covering 46,700 applications for payment, comprising practically all producers of sugar beets, an average of $362 per farm; and for the 1938 record crop of approximately 1,700,000 tons of refined sugar it is estimated that the Government payments will aggregate $20,300,000. These payments are, of course, supplementary to the payments made to growers by the processors.

4. Special payments to producers in the event of abandonment of acreage or deficiency in production under certain conditions as the result of natural causes beyond control of producers, such as freeze, drought, insect pests, etc. Producers are not required to pay premiums in money or in kind for this form of crop insurance.

As the result of the above measures and similar legislation in 1934, the acreage and average returns of mainland sugar-beet producers under the administration by this department have been increased as follows:

	Acreage	Average income per ton	Farm value
Average 1909–14	485,000	$5.50	$26,697,000
Average, 5 years preceding sugar program (1920–33)	785,000	6.09	54,249,000
Average, 5 years following sugar program (1934–38)[1]	798,000	6.79	60,428,000
1938 (estimated)	931,000	[1]6.30	70,814,000

[1] 1938 estimated.

The income per ton of cane for mainland cane growers increased from an average of $3.39 in the 1929–33 period to an average of $3.98 per ton in the 1934–38 period, while the farm value of the sugarcane crop increased from $10,134,000 to $20,624,000.

The net income of the five major sugar-beet processing companies, representing about 75 percent of the total sugar-beet production of the United States, expressed as a percentage of their net worth averaged over 9 percent for the 5-year period of the sugar program 1934–38, as compared with a loss of 4.2 percent in 1932 and 1.9 percent in 1933. (These figures are for the fiscal years ending in the spring of each year.) For the year 1937, primarily as a result of the invalidation of the sugar-processing tax, the net income reached 12.47 percent.

Under the somewhat adverse conditions of decreased general purchasing power of consumers in 1938 and greatly increased sugar-beet and sugar-cane production during the years between invalidation of crop adjustment in January 1936 and resumption thereof under the new sugar act, a reduction in net income for the fiscal year ended in the spring of 1939 may be anticipated.

Statements have been made in recent congressional discussion which would indicate that the share of the domestic industry in supplying the United States market has been decreased under the sugar program. The fact is that the domestic share has increased markedly while the proportion of the United States consumption supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically been cut in half under the sugar legislation, as compared with the late twenties. In 1938 Cuba contributed about 28.8 percent of the total United States requirements as compared with 43 to 53 percent in the period 1925–30.

The 1937 sugar-beet crop, the first to be marketed under the new law, gave the growers an income per ton equal on the average to parity prices. The increase in the income to growers from the 1937 crop will average close to $10 an acre over that of the preceding year. Independent growers of sugarcane will benefit similarly. The margin of the processors has been reduced somewhat but they have benefited from increased volume of tonnage, which has resulted in part from the assurance of a more equitable division of total returns. It is significant that the first sugar-beet plantings after the enactment of the sugar act have been large enough for the first time since 1934 to justify the expectation that the industry will be able to fill the sugar-marketing quota established for the sugar-beet area.

The income of sugar-beet and sugar-cane growers was increased and the total income of the sugar industry was maintained despite a decline in the general purchasing power of consumers. Moreover, this was accomplished without the evils of a rigid price structure. It is particularly significant that consumer requirements for sugar were adequately met at varying prices as industrial recession and recovery caused variations in consumer incomes.

It will be noted from the foregoing that the references in the congressional discussion to the "record low prices for sugar" have been misleading since the Federal payments of 60 cents per hundred pounds of sugar paid directly to the producers under the sugar program were not taken into consideration.

The second marketing year under the Sugar Act (which is the current crop) began in September 1938 and will terminate in September 1939. It is too early to forecast the outcome for sugar-beet producers since only a portion of the sugar from that crop has been marketed and under their participating contracts with processors, growers ordinarily receive about half of the net sales value of the sugar processed from the cane or beets sold.

It is to be noted that because the sugar processing season is a short one, there are considerable stocks of sugar throughout the year in the hands of processors, refiners, importers, speculators, and dealers. The Department is subject, therefore, to continuous pressure, in direct and indirect form, to utilize whatever power these interested parties believe it to possess to enhance the inventory value of such stocks. As of January 1, the total value of the visible supply of sugar alone is about $170,000,000, and a quarter of a cent increase would mean $10,000,000 additional to the owners of such sugars. The Congress, however, embodied in the Sugar Act certain standards limiting the discretion of the Secretary in fixing consumers' requirements.

It has been the policy of the Department to administer the provisions of the act in accordance with such standards and for the benefit of domestic producers and with protection to the conflicting interests of other groups affected by the act.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator recall whether or not, in the data which he has submitted, there are figures to indicate the amount of the subsidies which the Government has paid to the various sugar producers?

Mr. BARKLEY. In one of the tables there is a statement of the amount of benefits paid to the sugar producers in the years when they were paid.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to move a recess or adjournment at this time?

Mr. BARKLEY. As soon as we have an executive session.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield for just a moment for a very brief statement?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I must recall that all the discussion on this subject has been by unanimous consent. I have made no objection. Nothing is before the Senate. I should like to conclude today's session. Most of the discussion this afternoon has been by unanimous consent. There has been nothing before the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. McNARY. We have other important things to do. I have been patient. I want the session to close. How long would the Senator take?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the Senator from Oregon wishes to take me off my feet at the conclusion of my remarks because I have yielded to the Senator from Florida, he may do so.

Mr. McNARY. I have no intention to do that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator from Florida would not take more than 5 minutes to say what he wishes to say. I realize that all the discussion since we finished the naval bill has been by unanimous consent. However, we do such things when we have nothing else to do.

Mr. McNARY. But there is something else to do. I have some important things to do in my office. I ask the Senator from Florida how long he wishes to discuss the question.

Mr. PEPPER. Probably for 2 minutes; perhaps only 1¾ minutes.

Mr. McNARY. Two minutes will be all right.

Mr. PEPPER. We have been discussing two subjects which are as vital to the State of Florida as to any State in the Union. I believe the State of Florida produces more cattle than does the State of Wyoming. Therefore, we are somewhat interested, at least, in the matter concerning the purchase of beef and beef products. Florida is also one of the great sugar-producing areas of the country.

In response to the comments made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I merely wish to say that the unfortunate thing about the present sugar program is that the American farmers who are not able to grow as much sugar as physical conditions would permit, because of the restrictions of the present law, are not the ones who profit by the increased purchasing power which the offshore areas develop as a result of being allowed to grow more sugar than they would otherwise be able to grow without our sugar program. So, to a degree, there is involved the question of our industrial interests which sell into the markets which are developed in foreign countries by the sugar program being aided at the expense of American agriculture or the question of one part of our agriculture being held back to promote the interest of another segment of our agriculture.

As I have stated, the State of Florida is a large producer of beef. I may say that the quality of beef produced in Florida has constantly been improving and to a very great degree under experimentation which has been carried on by the United States Department of Agriculture, until we think the quality of our beef is at least equal if not superior to that of beef produced in any other State in the Union.

I am glad to know that the controversy is not over fresh beef but canned beef, which is put up by the large packing houses, which perhaps pay a rather small price to the farmer from whom they obtain the beef which they put into the cans.

I simply wanted to say that I urge that the Government protect the legitimate cattle industry and especially the real cattle growers of the country in every possible way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I can testify to the high quality of Florida beef, because I have eaten it, as well as many other Florida products.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in view of the objection which has been made, I dislike very much to ask the Senator from Kentucky to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have been rather patient all afternoon. I desire to make some general remarks concerning the effect of the importation of corned beef into this country.

I am not ready to agree with the Senator from Kentucky that this controversy is altogether a "tempest in a teapot," or that the whole subject has by any means been covered this afternoon. However, inasmuch as the amendment has been adopted and is in the naval bill, I do not see how further discussion at this time would be profitable. Nevertheless, there are many things in behalf of the cattle industry which have not been touched upon, and many reasons why this is not a "tempest in a teapot."

Mr. BARKLEY. I only rose to discuss or mention the question because so much had appeared in the newspapers about it, and because the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], in discussing sugar, diverted from his remarks on sugar to discuss corned beef. I felt that the RECORD should contain certain facts which the President took into consideration when he authorized the purchase.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I was not censuring him for doing that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand.

Mr. HATCH. My only regret is that many of the facts put into the RECORD would bear considerable explanation.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be.

Mr. HATCH. I regret that the hour is so late that we have not time to discuss them at length.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the majority leader whether or not it is intended to have an executive session this afternoon. The reason why I ask is that the nomination of Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority was confirmed on May 8, but the President has not as yet been notified.

Mr. BARKLEY. As soon as we can get to it, I shall move an executive session, and we can then take up that matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Capt. Harry A. Stuart, an additional number in grade, to be a rear admiral in the Navy.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John K. Valentine, of Iowa, to be United States attorney for the southern district of Iowa, vice Edwin G. Moon, deceased.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William M. Leiserson to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask, if possible, that this nomination go over until tomorrow. I have a few remarks to make on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator be ready tomorrow?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes that this appointment has been pending for some time. There is a vacancy, and it is important that it be filled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

DORTHA MAE ROBERTS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dortha Mae Roberts to be postmaster at Wilmington, Calif., which had been adversely reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was rejected.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry additional nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remaining nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY—JOHN K. VALENTINE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary the nomination of John K. Valentine to be United States attorney for the southern district of Iowa has been favorably reported. The term of court in that district begins next Monday, and the grand jury will be in session. It is important that Mr. Valentine's nomination be confirmed and that the President be notified. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the nomination be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

DR. HARCOURT A. MORGAN—NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, out of an abundance of caution I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation on May 8 of the nomination of Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, May 19, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 18 (legislative day of May 8), 1939

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

TO BE ENSIGNS, TO RANK AS SUCH FROM MAY 29, 1939

Robert Donald Brodie, IV
Robert William Goehring

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee, O God, do we lift up our hearts in prayer. Hear Thou us from Thy dwelling place, and when Thou hearest, forgive. Thy mercies are before us, and we wonder at Thy care. We pray Thee to take us into sacred nearness with Thyself. Do Thou lead our leaders and teach our teachers and direct us all out from social bondage and from the burdens which unrighteous ambitions may have laid upon us. Inspire us to unselfish endeavor, so may this new day bring good cheer to our country. O Sunlight of peace and power, illumine our spiritual natures that we may understand clearly Thy will, and incline our hearts to do it. Be with any who may have wandered far and bring them back to a holy faith. In our Saviour's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] may have unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes today at the close of the legislative business in order for the day and any other special orders that may have been entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the request?

Mr. MAPES. That the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] may be permitted to address the House at the close of the legislative business in order for the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]?

There was no objection.

WARRANT AND COMMISSIONED WARRANT OFFICERS IN THE MARINE CORPS

Mr. DELANEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Rept. No. 654), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 184

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6044, a bill regulating the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers in the Marine Corps. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

MAJOR OVERHAULING OF CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. DELANEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Rept. No. 655), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 185

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6065, a bill authorizing major overhauls for certain naval vessels, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a report of the Debt Policy Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered by Hon. DAVE E. SATTERFIELD, Jr., at Jamestown, Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN]?

There was no objection.

COMMISSIONING OF "THE AMERICAN SEAMAN"

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, The American Seaman, the best and most completely equipped ship in the world today for training merchant marine personnel, will be commissioned at the National Maritime Day ceremonies in Washington on Monday, May 22.

With the sailing vessel Joseph Conrad and the State school ships Nantucket and Annapolis, The American Seaman will be in Washington for celebration of National Maritime Day.

These four vessels will be open to the public from 2 p. m. to 7 p. m. on Monday, May 22, and from 9 a. m. to 7 p. m. Tuesday, May 23. The United States Coast Guard Academy Band of New London, Conn., will play for the guests on both days, and a hearty invitation is extended to all Members to visit these ships.

The American Seaman is equipped with classrooms, two complete machine shops, general workshops, galleys, bake shops, refrigerators, and all facilities for giving comprehensive training to deck and engine crews and members of the steward's department.

With the sailing vessel Joseph Conrad and the State school ships Nantucket and Annapolis, The American Seaman will be in Washington for celebration of National Maritime Day. Members of the Senate Commerce and the Senate Education and Labor and of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries and House Labor Committees, the four congressional committees which are particularly concerned in the Maritime Commission's training program, will inspect the four ships.

As stated above, the four vessels will be open to the public from 2 p. m. to 7 p. m., on Monday, May 22, and from 9 a. m. to 7 p. m. Tuesday, May 23. The United States Coast Guard Academy Band from New London, Conn., will play for the guests on both days.

Following the inspection The American Seaman will return to New York to begin her first training cruise to Gulf ports. On this cruise, which will last the month of June, she will pick up trainees at Pensacola, Mobile, New Orleans, Gulfport, and Galveston.

Until the commissioning of The American Seaman the training work of the United States Maritime Service, which was created by the Maritime Commission as part of its training program, has been conducted at shore stations or on smaller vessels, which do not make the long cruises such as a merchant ship makes. Addition of this vessel will aid in development of a balanced training program, including service at sea. Short trips are taken on the Joseph Conrad to give the trainees experience under sail. The Maritime Service also uses three Coast Guard vessels—the 125-foot boats Yeaton and Kimball on the east coast and the cutter Northland on the west coast.

The Nantucket and Annapolis are the school ships for Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, respectively. These, with the two other State school ships, constituted the principal educational facilities for training merchant marine officers prior to establishment of the Maritime Service. They are now cooperating with the Federal Government.

In command of The American Seaman is Lt. Comdr. Charles Elzweiler, United States Coast Guard; of the Joseph Conrad, Lt. M. T. Braswell, United States Coast Guard; of the Nantucket, Capt. C. A. Abele, United States Navy, retired, superintendent of the Massachusetts State Nautical School; and of the Annapolis, Capt. Martin K. Metcalf, United States Navy, retired, superintendent of the Pennsylvania State Nautical School.

On its return trip to New York The American Seaman will try out one of its most important features—a distillation system for supplying fresh water while at sea. This system has a capacity of 104,000 gallons of fresh water every 24 hours and will make the vessel a highly valuable naval auxiliary in time of war.

The American Seaman was recently converted at the Baltimore, Md., plant of Bethlehem Steel Co. She is the old Edgemoor, but retains little but her hull and engines. Of 7,038 gross tons, she is 409.6 feet long, 54.2 feet wide, and 27.1 feet deep. As now loaded she will draw 20 feet. She will be one of the largest vessels ever to come up the Potomac to Washington.

One of the most romantic square riggers still under sail, the Joseph Conrad now gives to American sailors an understanding and appreciation of the traditions and practices of the sea. The former Georg Stage, she trained the sailors of Denmark as a school ship for nearly 30 years before being bought by Alan Villiers for his 2-year round-the-world trip. She was transferred to the United States Maritime Service by Huntington Hartford, of New York and Newport, R. I. She is 147 feet 6 inches overall, 212 gross tons, and has an auxiliary Diesel motor of 160 horsepower.

It is hoped that every Member of Congress will visit these ships, see the splendid work that is being done, and that each Member of Congress may become an ardent advocate of an American merchant marine, urging all Americans to ship and haul on American ships. In this way subsidies may be reduced, and I hope the merchant marine may be made self-supporting.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement I made to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two letters that I have received concerning the next W. P. A. appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

There was no objection.

APPROPRIATION FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS AND FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, when the appropriation bill for rivers, harbors, and flood control was up there were estimates, taken from the hearings, of $110,000,000 and $30,000,000 for flood control and rivers and harbors, respectively. I now have the estimate from the Army engineers, $50,000,000—$25,000,000 for rivers and harbors and $25,000,000 for flood control.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include those estimates at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection.

PROJECTS INCLUDED IN INCREASED AMOUNTS FOR RIVER AND HARBOR AND FLOOD-CONTROL PROJECTS

Mr. SNYDER. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business this morning is the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. The previous question was ordered on yesterday on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am requested to ask for a separate vote on two amendments, one pertaining to the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers and the other to the Umatilla Dam.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: On page 5, beginning in line 20, strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, that is not the first amendment. The first amendment is with reference to the Umatilla Dam.

The SPEAKER. The amendment which has just been reported is the first amendment in the bill on which a separate vote was demanded.

The Clerk will report the language proposed to be stricken out by the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "Waterway connecting the Tombigbee and Tennessee Rivers, in accordance with the recommendation of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in the report submitted in House Document No. 269, Seventy-sixth Congress. The sum of $12,500,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the prosecution of this project."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 82, noes 45.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 204, nays 160, answered "present" 2, not voting 64, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: On page 8, beginning in line 17, strike out lines 17 to 22, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a table from Government statistics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY, AND DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Department of Commerce, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 658), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order on the bill.

THE COAST GUARD

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution for printing in the RECORD under the rules, which was referred to the House calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 180

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1369, an act to authorize necessary facilities for the Coast Guard in the interest of national defense and the performance of its maritime police functions. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 162), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 162

Resolved, That the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation of the fisheries of Alaska with special reference to (a) the use of traps in the catching and taking of salmon in the waters of Alaska, whether or not the use of traps should be prohibited for that purpose, and if prohibited the mode and manner and time thereof; (b) the advisability of maintaining or changing the season prescribed at the present time for the catching and taking of salmon in the several fishing areas or regions in Alaska; (c) the effect of fishing for and taking of herring, as at present operated, upon the salmon fishery and particularly that part carried on by trolling, and whether or not the taking of herring for conversion into oil and meal in any part of Alaska should be further restricted or entirely prohibited; (d) the offshore fishing by foreign nationals for both crabs and salmon; and (e) any other matters concerning the fisheries of Alaska which the committee or the subcommittee may think it desirable to investigate with a view to the conservation and preservation of the fishery and a reasonable development of the Alaska fishing industry.

For the purposes of this resolution, the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the Territory of Alaska and the United States, whether the House is sitting or has recessed or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or subcommittee, or having been required to produce necessary books or papers or documents or vouchers by authority of said committee or subcommittee, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the study and investigation heretofore authorized, or who fails to produce such books or papers or documents or vouchers as required by subpenas, shall be held to the penalties provided in section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 192), as amended.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date the result of its investigation, together with its recommendations for the enactment of desirable or necessary legislation.

With the following amendments:

Page 1, line 4, insert before the word "an" the figure "1" in parentheses.

Page 2, line 10, strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following:

"(2) to make such inquiry as said House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof may consider in relation to the merchant marine in Alaska; and (3) such inquiry as said committee or said subcommittee may consider important or pertinent to the merchant marine or fisheries of the United States."

THE LATE JOHN J. DOUGLAS

Mr. FLAHERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLAHERTY. Mr. Speaker, it is with a definite knowledge of my own limitations in that capacity that I rise in this place and in this House to pay tribute to the memory of one whose eloquent voice was often heard in this Chamber. John J. Douglas, to whose memory I have the honor today of paying this small measure of tribute, was a Member of the Sixty-ninth through the Seventy-fourth Congresses—from March 4, 1925, to January 3, 1935. A man of broad and deep scholarly attainments, an eloquent master of the spoken word, keen in discernment and debate, there are Members here who remember his cadenced and rolling periods, his vivid and vigorous imagery and his consummate artistry in the oratory of an older day.

He left here after 10 years of service for public service in his native city and gave to it all that was in him of idealism and devotion. As one who has the honor and the privilege of representing the district he served so capably and so well, I rejoice in this opportunity to spread upon the records of this body this meager and all too inadequate tribute to his memory:

In faith and in truth
Here was a man.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the consent given me this morning may be to extend my remarks at the point at which I extended the invitation, because the remarks refer to that particular invitation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by the Honorable John C. Beukema, chairman of the executive committee of the National Seaway Council, before a joint meeting of the Harbor Commission, Kiwanis Club, and Rotary Club of Manistee, Mich. The speech exceeds the page limit, and I have here an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY, AND DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Department of Commerce, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and pending that, Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from California as to the amount of time for general debate? I would suggest we run along today on general debate.

Mr. CARTER. That would be satisfactory, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, and, perhaps, late in the afternoon we could fix a closing time for general debate.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I then ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between the gentleman from California and myself, the debate to run along until later in the afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6392; and pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be divided equally between himself and the gentleman from California. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6392, with Mr. COOLEY in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

The bill pending before the House today is one making appropriations for the State, Justice, and Commerce Departments for the fiscal year 1940. Heretofore appropriations for the Labor Department were made a part of this measure but, because of the growing complexity of the work and the burdens that were imposed in endeavoring to arrive at a fair appraisal of the operating needs of all these Departments, it was decided by the chairman to eliminate the appropriations for the Labor Department, and in turn to combine them with the appropriations for the Social Security Board.

The report accompanying the bill gives, I think, a very detailed explanation of the action taken by the committee on the various paragraphs appearing in the bill. I am sure the membership of the House would not desire me to give a laborious recitation of all of the reductions which we have made, so I shall confine myself to those items I am confident will be of general interest to the entire membership.

The bill carries a total appropriation of $121,400,000, an increase of approximately $26,700,000 over the appropriations for this year, but a reduction of nearly $3,000,000 under the Budget estimates. With reference to this total increase, amounting to more than $26,000,000, it should be pointed out that approximately $20,000,000 of this sum is made necessary by the taking of the Sixteenth Decennial Census. The total cost of the census field work and the statistical compilation will amount in all to $45,200,000. The amount contained in the bill for this year will be used almost exclusively for the expense involved in enumerating population and the filling out of the questionnaires. Aside from this increase of $20,000,000, we have felt of necessity to provide approximately $3,000,000 additional for the Bureau of Prisons, the necessity for which I shall advert to later in my remarks.

Before taking up any of the appropriations for the individual bureaus or units within the three departments, I do want to make reference to the subject of detailing employees from one division to another within a department or from one division in one department to another department. Two years ago our subcommittee called attention to this practice and suggested that the law which permits the assignment of employees from one unit to another for a period of not to exceed 120 days, subject to renewal for a like period, had for its purpose facilitating administration when an emergency arose that could not have been contemplated at the time the Budget estimates were submitted. It never was the intent of Congress that the law sanctioning these assignments should be abused to the extent of being availed of as legal authority for the permanent transfer of employees from one place to another.

In spite of the committee's representation in this regard, the practice of making these permanent details still continues in some departments. In many instances the detail has continued for several years. Details have been made to the White House and even to congressional committees. I want to go on record now—and I know I express the unanimous conviction of my subcommittee—as stating that this practice will not be allowed to continue. Substantially the only control that Congress has over administrative agencies is through the power of appropriation, and if I have anything to do with it I intend to see that employees provided for a given purpose are used for that purpose, and that purpose alone. Otherwise, why require a break-down for specific appropriations by Congress?

Mr. Chairman, before I proceed with the detailed items covered in the bill, I pause at this point to express my profound thanks and appreciation to the members of my Subcommittee on Appropriations, who have labored so sincerely in aiding the chairman of this subcommittee to present this bill today. On the Democratic side we have the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McANDREWS], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR], and on the Republican side my very distinguished colleague, who came with me in the Sixty-ninth Congress, the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN]. This bill has been prepared and presented to you without the slightest taint of partisanship in any way. We have worked hard, and I am grateful to these colleagues for their very fine spirit of cooperation in helping me today to present this bill, unanimously.

Also, I pause to express my thanks to our friend Jack McFall, clerk of the committee. Jack is one of these boys who has been around Congress for many years, and as he grows in age, so does he grow in stature as a member of the staff of the Committee on Appropriations. [Applause.] We are grateful to him for his very fine cooperation and aid in the presentation of this bill.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

With the world in the troubled state that it is it becomes increasingly important that we turn our thoughts to implementing our State Department with sufficient personnel to keep us accurately informed of developments abroad. After going through the requests of the State Department for appropriations, item by item, we have allowed increases over the current year's appropriation amounting to $1,326,000. The items entering into this increase are scattered throughout the bill and involve both the Department of State proper in Washington and the Foreign Service in the field. It is interesting to observe that the amount expended for light in the Foreign Service increased $50,000 this year over the previous year, the increased expense being attributed almost entirely to the night work being performed by our representatives abroad.

It is with particular satisfaction that I note that the President under his reorganization plan No. 2 proposed to consolidate all of our foreign services, namely, those of the State, Commerce, and Agriculture Departments, under one head. Three years ago I made a tour of Europe visiting some 30 of our missions over there and upon returning I filed a report with the committee in which I recommended the consolidation which the President now proposes to make. There is no question in my mind but that large economies will result from this merger, to say nothing of the increased efficiency that must inevitably follow.

The committee has allowed 10 additional Foreign Service officers with the understanding that if, under the terms of the consolidation just referred to, it is found that their services are not absolutely essential, the money for their salaries will be allowed to revert to the Treasury. Funds to the extent of approximately $100,000 have been approved to make promotions of certain clerks, both American and alien, in the Foreign Service. I think the House would be interested to know that the evidence before the committee indicates that some American clerks have gone as long as 17 years without a promotion of any kind. I am confident that Congress with knowledge of such facts would never countenance such a situation to continue.

Last year Congress authorized an appropriation of not to exceed $1,000,000 annually for the construction of buildings for our Foreign Service abroad. We are recommending the appropriation of $500,000 for this purpose, with an additional contractual authority of $200,000. The larger part of this sum will be expended in South and Latin American countries.

The situation which arose in China 2 years ago emphasized the need for an emergency fund for the State Department to be used in the protection of American citizens abroad. Such emergencies cannot, of course, be anticipated; but when they do arise, prompt and effective means must be taken if American lives are to be safeguarded. The committee recognizes the desirability of such an emergency fund and has, therefore, inserted in the bill language that will permit the use of not to exceed $500,000 of any of the funds appropriated by the State Department for the protection of the lives of American citizens in any foreign country when the President shall deem that an emergency exists.

I want to pay a tribute in passing to the character of the administration of this Department. When we consider that the net cost to the taxpayer of the services of our State Department in the matter of foreign relations is only about $11,000,000, allowance being made for fees accruing to the Government from their activities, one can but feel that we are truly "getting our money's worth" in the administration of the State Department.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

I shall now direct a few remarks to the appropriations for the Department of Justice. We are increasing the appropriation from $46,270,000 for the current year to $52,745,000 for 1940, an increase of nearly $6,500,000. I should just like the Members of the House to get a copy of the committee report on the bill and look in the extreme right-hand column. It will be noted that in nearly every item the committee has made some reduction. We have used the pruning knife where we felt that we could do so without seriously affecting the operations of our legal machinery, and after much arduous toil we were able to reduce the Budget estimates by approximately $1,150,000.

Just why is this sizeable increase of $6,500,000 necessary? Because, ladies and gentlemen, we continue to pass laws creating additional Federal crimes, which in turn make necessary the appointment of additional law-enforcement officers. From then on the whole process is a vicious circle—more criminals are apprehended, more district attorneys are needed to prosecute, more marshals are needed, then additional judges must be appointed. After the additional judges, more witness fees are needed, more clerks of courts, more bailiffs, and then, last but by no means least, more penal institutions and more personnel to operate them. The evidence before our committee indicates, for instance, that every time an additional judge is appointed there is an additional cost running throughout the entire department of approximately $125,000 annually. I mention all of this solely to convey to you that we must not inveigh too much against the administrative units that are engaged in spending the taxpayers' money but rather, perhaps, we should stop and take stock of our legislative action and decide whether we should continue to place additional burdens on the administrative agencies which, in turn, compel them to ask for additional funds if they are to carry out their duty of enforcing the law—a duty which we have imposed upon them.

This year appropriations are contained in the bill for the appointment of 22 additional judges. As I have indicated, that is just the initial cost. Practically every item in the bill must be stepped up proportionately in order to take care of the work load that follows. So, in the Tax Division, Criminal Division, Administrative Division, Claims Division, the Bureau of Investigation, and other offices under the Attorney General, increases have been approved in varying amounts right down the line. I, for one, want to see our appropriations reduced rather than increased year by year as they have been since 1933, but I will not be a party to arbitrarily making reductions in appropriation items when I know that the effect of such action will be to stultify the orderly processes of law enforcement.

Federal Bureau of Investigation

I come now to the question of the appropriation for the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The Budget approved an estimate of $7,000,000 to operate this agency during the next year. This amounts to an increase of approximately $500,000 over the amount available for the general purposes of the Bureau during 1939. We are recommending to the House that the entire amount of the Budget estimate be allowed. I wish I felt at liberty to take the time of the House to go into detail in the matter of the oppressive burden of work that continues to confront this Bureau. I might mention as one element of important evidence that it is estimated that more than 1,000,000 hours of overtime will be performed by the employees of the Bureau during the current fiscal year. The agents of the Bureau are carrying an average case load at the present time of 18½ cases, whereas during the past year they carried 16 cases per man; evidence before the committee indicates that 10 cases is the maximum load that should be carried for efficient investigative operation.

There are at the present time 6,682 unassigned cases—cases which for want of adequate investigative personnel have been simply docketed as cases and nothing done about them. In these cases, of course, delay causes evidence to disappear; and if and when the cases can be taken up, the lot of the investigator is made that much more difficult.

In the Bureau at Washington there has likewise been a tremendous increase in activity and service required to be rendered. The fingerprint file has now grown to the amazing total of 10,300,000 sets of fingerprints, or nearly 1,400,000 over the number on file in 1938. Of this total number of prints, over 2,000,000 are of the noncriminal variety—so-called civil fingerprints. Recently the President and the Vice President have taken the lead in having their fingerprints taken, and that, in turn, has awakened an interest throughout the country in the matter of civil fingerprinting—all of it done on a voluntary basis.

Testimony given by Director Hoover established the fact that other divisions within the Department of Justice have been calling upon the Bureau for services of agents in order to conduct various types of investigations. In one instance over 100 agents were called from their regular tasks and assigned to make certain investigations which could not be construed to be of an emergency nature. The result of this development has been that deficiencies in appropriations have been created from time to time, much as all of us would like to avoid them.

As a means of avoiding these deficiencies in the future, the committee has indicated to Director Hoover that hereafter before any agents are assigned to any work other than that which arises in the normal routine, an order in writing from the Attorney General directing such assignment should be required.

In addition to the allowance of the $7,000,000, which I have just made reference to, the committee has set up a special paragraph of appropriation of $300,000. It is our purpose to limit the use of this fund to kidnaping, extortion, bank robbery, and espionage cases. Let me just cite an example of a situation that the Bureau has been running into. For the 5 years preceding 1938 there was an average of 35 espionage cases per year; in 1938 there were 634 such cases, or an increase of 599 over the previous year. This tremendous increase could not possibly be anticipated; and yet, once arising, means must be found to cope with it. We feel that with this additional $300,000 which we have allowed—its use subject to release only by the Attorney General—the Bureau will be able to conduct its activities with a reasonable degree of efficiency during the fiscal year 1940.

Under the terms of an Executive order of the President all employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, other than the special agents, were placed under civil service, effective on February 1 of this year. The committee is informed that at the present time the status of the special agents is in abeyance, so to speak, as the question as to whether they will or will not go under civil service is in the hands of a special committee created by the President to pass on this and similar matters.

For the past several years this Bureau has been a model of operating efficiency; even the Civil Service Commission has admitted that the personnel possesses a high standard of capability. I for one am a firm believer in the civil-service system, and only last year the committee placed one of the units of the Department of Justice under the operation of civil-service laws and regulations. I do believe, however, that we should not confound theory with condition. Here we have a unit, the employees of which possess remarkably high standards. As an organization the Federal Bureau of Investigation maintains an esprit de corps that is second to none in the Federal Government. Politics have never governed the selection of these employees. They have been employed only after a painstaking investigation of the family, life, background, and habits of each of them. Bearing these facts in mind, I am unable to see what the Government can possibly gain by applying a series of set rules and regulations which will compel, automatically, the employment of those that qualify from an academic standpoint without applying any determinants of character and selectivity. The subcommittee is unanimous in feeling that none of the employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation should be under civil service. Accordingly it has placed a limitation in the bill denying the use of any of the funds for the payment of any civil-service employees.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for information?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I assume that an explanation was given before the gentleman's committee of what brought about this tremendous increase in espionage cases.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes; there was information given the committee, but it was of a confidential character, to a great extent, and the gentleman will not find very much about it in the printed hearings. As a matter of fact, as the gentleman knows, much of the more serious work done by the Bureau of Investigation is of a highly confidential character.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. To inquire of the gentleman whether the $7,000,000 is enough to carry on this excellent work of the Bureau of Investigation. I think we are all agreed that is one of the most efficient and most necessary and best administered bureaus in the Government.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I agree with the statement the gentleman just made as to the efficiency of the Bureau of Investigation. They have done a marvelous job, and are doing a marvelous job. I regret to say, however, that this is the amount estimated for by the Bureau of the Budget. I may say to the gentleman that the estimates submitted to the Budget from the Bureau were in excess of $8,000,000. However, the committee has endeavored in practically every instance to confine itself within the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes additional.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. If there is any case when exceeding the Budget would seem to be justified, it is in this very excellent Bureau.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I may reply by saying that I have great sympathy with the gentleman's views.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further for an additional question?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Are the fingerprints taken of those of us who were in the Army in the World War available to the Bureau of Investigation?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. In reply to the gentleman's inquiry, all of the fingerprinting of the Army, of every character since fingerprints have been taken by that service, have been transferred to the Bureau of Investigation.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I thank the gentleman.

Antitrust Division

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The committee has allowed an increase of approximately $500,000 for the Antitrust Division. Evidence was presented to us indicating that there are some notorious violations of the antitrust laws which should be cleaned up, and that the only way this can be accomplished is by an augmentation of personnel. I might suggest that the Members refer to page 164 of the hearings accompanying the bill. There you will find a series of cases by number with a statement opposite each number indicating what certain industries are doing in direct violation and contravention of the antitrust laws. The names of the industries involved in these charges are, of course, confidential. With the additional sum granted it will be possible for the Antitrust Division to set up regional offices throughout the United States and proceed with dispatch to institute necessary investigations and prosecutions.

Bureau of Prisons

I could talk to you for an hour about the problem of our penal institutions, but time forbids more than a passing reference. Our penal system has had an amazing growth in the past few years. Approximately $14,000,000 is being expended now out of emergency funds to complete a building program of additional reformatories and jails. We have over 18,000 prisoners in our various institutions this year. The growth in our prison population may be explained generally by three factors: First, laws creating new crimes and extending the scope of existing Federal crimes; second, increased judicial activity; third, longer sentences. As I stated in the outset of my remarks, we have been compelled to increase the appropriations for the Prison Bureau by over $3,000,000 for next year. Director Bennett has told the committee that if the present annual increase in the number of Federal prisoners continues, it will be necessary for us to build on an average of one institution per year to house the increased prison population.

The committee has consolidated the appropriations for the different institutions that were heretofore carried separately. This will afford greater administrative elasticity and will permit some savings to be made in operation.

We are endeavoring to reduce the working hours of prison guards. Several years ago they worked a straight 10-hour day and a 70-hour week. Gradually that has been reduced to a 52-hour week, and within another year it is hoped that we may be able to establish a straight 8-hour day for these custodial officers.

Law clerks for district judges

In 1936 Congress authorized the appointment of law clerks to Federal district judges. Since that time repeated efforts have been made to provide an appropriation for these employees, but without avail. In the Budget for 1940 funds were approved therein for the appointment of 40 of these law clerks.

I say to you that there is no need for deceiving ourselves about this matter. This is another "camel's nose under the tent" proposition. Just as soon as we allow this first increment of law clerks, then may we just as well open the floodgates and appropriate for a law clerk for each of the 189 district judges. The entire estimate for the appointment of law clerks has therefore been disallowed. At the same time the committee is not unmindful of the fact that in certain judicial districts where the work load is particularly heavy the standard of judicial decision would be improved if the services of law clerks were available. As a means of affording some relief in such districts, the committee has inserted language in the bill which will permit the employment of a combination stenographer and law clerk at a salary of not to exceed $3,600 per year. The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals here in Washington has five employees possessing dual qualifications as a stenographer and a licensed lawyer. We have left the operation of this matter to the individual judge. If he desires to continue as at present, with a stenographer-secretary at a salary of not to exceed $2,500 per annum, he may do so. If, on the other hand, he chooses to avail himself of the permissive language which we have inserted, he may hire a stenographer-law clerk at a salary not to exceed $3,600 per annum. In no event, however, shall more than one employee be allowed to any one district judge.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Who will determine which judge is entitled to the $3,600 clerk-stenographer?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The judge himself.

Mr. WALTER. Does anybody pass on his recommendation?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. No, sir.

Mr. WALTER. If a judge decides he needs a clerk-stenographer he can request it and have it granted to him?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The bill authorizing the appointment of law clerks provides that the senior circuit judge should make recommendation as to the need for law clerks. In my judgment his recommendation should likewise be required before the appointment of these stenographer-law clerks is made.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. That means, in effect, that any judge or every judge is entitled to that same clerk-stenographer; is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. It is not a clerk-stenographer. It is a stenographer-law clerk.

Mr. BROOKS. Yes; law clerk-stenographer.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS. So that it would cover any judge in the United States?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes; as long as the appropriation is available. We carry $50,000 in this bill for that purpose.

Mr. BROOKS. How many will that cover?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. It takes care of the 40 districts where it has been estimated by the Budget that this character of service is desirable.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Is it within the contemplation of the committee to provide that sort of employee in each case where the Committee on the Judiciary felt that clerks should be appointed?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I would think so, I may say to the gentleman, as the exigencies of the occasion demand from year to year.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Next I come to the Department of Commerce. We are allowing an increase of approximately $18,900,000 over the 1939 appropriation for the Department of Commerce. We have reduced the Budget estimates, however, by approximately $400,000. As I have already explained, the entire increase that we have allowed is more than made up by the amount we have placed in the bill to begin the program of taking the sixteenth decennial census.

You will recall at the outset of my remarks, I stated the total expenses estimated for the decennial census is $45,200,000 on a 2-year program. This will take care of the first year's program under that estimate.

Bureau of foreign and domestic commerce

Under the appropriations for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, we have made some slight changes in the estimates. We have added, for example, $37,000 over the Budget for the district and cooperative offices. The Budget had proposed a reduction of $10,000 for next year under the 1939 appropriation. We hear on every hand, "What are we doing to help business? Here, gentlemen, is one of the places where for a dollar expended you can bring back that amount perhaps a hundred times over to business in the form of increased financial returns. The district and cooperative offices of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce are located throughout the country and serve as a point of contact for business and industry. Information is supplied by these offices. I will mention to you the trade opportunities that were distributed to business organizations by these offices in 1938. I may say parenthetically that trade-opportunity reports are what their name implies, namely, statistical data indicating where, when, and how industrial concerns might look for a market for their products.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. SANDAGER. Is it not a fact that European countries are engaged in a very intensive effort to get foreign trade in South America?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. That is true.

Mr. SANDAGER. And every dollar we spend along this line will be paid back several times over?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I agree with the gentleman entirely. I think here is one case where the Congress can aid business and industry by maintaining such a service as this.

Two hundred and seventeen thousand of these reports were distributed in 1938, an increase of 87 percent over the previous year. With the comparatively small increase allowed by the committee, one additional district office can be opened and some additional personnel provided to strengthen existing offices.

Census Bureau

Under the Bureau of the Census, in addition to making provision for the first year of the 2-year decennial census program, we have approved a Budget increase of $20,000 over this year's appropriation for compiling old-age census records. Because of the unprecedented number of our citizens applying for authoritative information regarding their age, for purposes of social security, the Bureau has been unable to keep abreast of the work and give expeditious reply to the inquiries. At the present time over 70,000 applications for age information are on file. People sometimes wait for 6 months before they are able to procure proof of their age to establish their right to social-security benefits. We are hopeful that with the increase that is allowed this arrearage of work may be considerably lessened.

Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation

Under the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, we have allowed a very small increase of approximately $11,000, in order that some additional technical personnel may be added to carry on the work incident to insuring safety of life at sea. Regular inspections of vessels in all of our waters are made with a view to protecting the traveling public and plans for vessel construction must be approved by the Bureau in order to insure the installation of reasonable safety features.

National Bureau of Standards

We have allowed increases amounting to $50,000 in the various appropriations for the Bureau of Standards in order that some additional studies may be instituted which are designed to be of economic benefit to the public, in general, and to business, in particular. A program of adopting standards for certain manufactured commodities entering into our South American trade will be undertaken in cooperation with the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce with the hope that by the establishment of uniform standards, importers in South America will be encouraged to purchase American-made goods.

We have saved $165,000 by eliminating an item for the purchase of land adjoining the present Bureau of Standards property. Here, again, was an item that could be considered as desirable but not necessary. With that thought in mind, we eliminated the appropriation from the bill.

Bureau of Lighthouses

The amounts allowed for the Bureau of Lighthouses show a reduction of approximately $100,000 under the 1939 appropriation. The Lighthouse Service was one of the first agencies established in the Federal Government. It has a long and distinguished history. I know the House will join with me in applauding a record which indicates that in spite of the fact that appropriations have been reduced since 1932 from $12,100,000 to $11,740,000, the Bureau at the same time has increased the number of aids to navigation which they are operating and managing from 21,500 to 29,000.

Coast and Geodetic Survey

The committee has approved increases totaling approximately $100,000 over the present year's appropriation for the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Included in this figure of $100,000 is an increase of $11,500 over the Budget estimates for a resurvey and sounding of the Boston Harbor. Several wrecks have occurred around the entrance to the harbor at Boston in recent years and the committee feels that this project should not be deferred any longer. It will be necessary to provide approximately this same amount next year in order to complete the work. This Bureau is operated as a commissioned service with the same privileges and perquisites as the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey performs the most essential function of charting highways on the sea, in coastal waters, and in the air. The demand for both nautical and aeronautical charts has increased with rapid strides. For example, it was testified that in 1937 they produced 5,000,000 aeronautical charts; during this year it is expected that the number will increase to 12,000,000, an increase of 140 percent in 2 years. This is one of our modest but most efficient services.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I heartily approve of this increase. I wish it had been more. It occurs to me that the ignorance of the people concerning our own country is astounding. I would have the Geodetic Survey, coupled with the Geological Survey, map on land and from the air the entire surface of the country, especially the Rocky Mountain area. We find in road building, in reclamation projects, and many other ways that we do not have accurate topographic information.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I may say to the gentleman, in reply, if he will look at our report, he will find reference where we recommend that emergency funds be made available for the very purpose which the gentleman has directed to our attention.

Mr. MURDOCK or Arizona. It is a wartime need also, as well as for peacetime use.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes. The committee is entirely in sympathy with the gentleman's views.

Bureau of Fisheries

We are proposing to increase the appropriation for the Bureau of Fisheries by only $10,000 in round numbers over the current year's appropriation. Last year the Bureau produced over 8,000,000,000 fish for stocking rivers and ponds. The provision is made for the construction of the last of the three hatcheries authorized by Congress. We are likewise making provision for the purchase of eight additional fish distribution trucks. Up to the last year or so the Bureau has been transporting fish by railway car. The expense of constructing and maintaining these cars was very considerable—$75,000 for the construction of the car alone. The distribution trucks can be purchased for approximately $2,000 each and are more effective in providing a speedy distribution of fish from the hatcheries.

We have added $10,000 to the Budget estimates to permit the employment of persons to prepare radio material for broadcast to fishermen from local stations. Many of our people engaged in fishing live in remote localities and their only medium of contact with the outside world is through the radio. It is the thought of the committee that periodic broadcasts can be made bringing them advice on market conditions, fish catch, and so forth, that will assist them from a financial standpoint.

Funds sufficient to purchase two speed boats for patrol service in Alaska have been approved and, likewise, $20,000 for the construction of a laboratory boat to be centered in southeastern Alaska and devoted to studies of the salmon and herring industry.

As is the case with the Bureau of Lighthouses, the Bureau of Fisheries has likewise reduced its appropriation by approximately $800,000 over the past 6 years, and yet in spite of this decrease, they have been able to increase their production of fish during the same period by approximately 25 percent. I consider this record one worthy of commendation.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. I am interested in that part of the bill, but if I may go back a little, covering the money appropriated for the marshal's office, I notice there has been an increase in that amount. Will that inure to the benefit of the individual deputy marshals or will that be used to increase the force?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. No; these funds are for additional deputies for the 22 new district judges.

Mr. BROOKS. It has been my experience that the deputy marshals were very much underpaid. With the attempt of the Attorney General to better the service it seems to me a corresponding increase would be in order.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. In all frankness, I may say to the gentleman from Louisiana that in the past 2 years we have provided funds directly appropriated for the purpose of increasing the salaries of the deputy marshals.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am also interested in adequate pay for deputy marshals. A little earlier I noticed the gentleman said something about an increase in the force for taking care of the census returns. One thing especially has been called to my attention, and that is the fact that old people who have reached the age of 60 or 65 years, natural-born American citizens, cannot prove that fact. We certainly ought to have more definite information in the hands of the Census Bureau and more facilities for making that available now in this period of beginning social security.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I may say to the gentleman, as I stated a moment ago, the committee allowed the Budget estimate, increasing this appropriation for the Bureau of the Census by some $20,000. It is in there for that very purpose. I think the information which the committee had was that there are some 70,000 such applications now on file in the Census Bureau awaiting the attention of the officials there. This additional appropriation is absolutely necessary to provide that service for those eligible for social-security advantages.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. Has the gentleman's committee taken into consideration the fact that employees of lightships along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts are paid smaller wages than like employees on the Pacific coast? Has the committee done anything to equalize these payments?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The question was discussed in the hearings, and we have assurances from the Bureau that careful consideration will be given this question during the year.

Mr. BLAND. I think something more than just careful examination should be given this, because these men on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts work just as hard as those on the Pacific coast.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. We are assured that the question will receive careful consideration. I agree with the gentleman's views.

Patent Office

I am always pleased for two reasons when I come to the Patent Office section of the bill; first, because it is the end; and, second, because it is the only agency carried in the bill outside of the Passport Division of the State Department which operates at a profit.

Every year but one since 1933 the final audit of receipts has reflected the fact that patent fees have more than offset the entire cost of administering the Patent Office. While I do not intend any invidious comparisons, I do think that it is proper to observe that for each of the 11 years preceding 1933 an operating deficit was incurred ranging anywhere from $85,000 to $827,000 per year. The work of the Patent Office continues to increase, but the status of the work is in not as healthy condition as was the case 3 or 4 years ago. Several of the examining divisions are falling behind in their consideration of patent applications, and if there is not some let-up in the number of new applications being received it is entirely possible that some additional funds will have to be allowed the Patent Office in order that it may render to our inventors the reasonable service to which they are unquestionably entitled.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I hate to interrupt so much, but I have had repeated complaints abcut the expense of securing patents. I wonder if we are giving proper encouragement to the inventive genius of America? I agree with the gentleman's remark that we want to protect the investors, but do we not also want to protect inventive genius?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I have reference to inventors, not investors. I am sorry the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Inventors are a class of people we do want to protect. It is so difficult to get a patent or proper reward for such efforts.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The gentleman is correct.

Although the appropriation for salaries has been increased by $160,000, it will not permit any additional personnel to be employed, inasmuch as this entire sum will be taken up by the costs of reallocation of patent examiners made by the Civil Service Commission.

After continued insistence by the committee, the cost of printing required by the Patent Office and done at the Government Printing Office has been reduced by approximately $100,000 per annum.

Mr. Chairman, I have already consumed much more time than I had intended. However, I have endeavored to give you briefly a general picture of the administration of these three great departments of our Government. I hope you will sustain your committee in the action we have taken. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am taking a peculiar pleasure at this time in delivering these remarks relative to the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Bureau of Prisons' activities of the Department of Justice, whose appropriation bill for the next fiscal year is now before us. I have taken a personal interest in the work of these two agencies for a number of years. It is only reasonable that I should, because I happen to be coauthor of the Federal Kidnaping Act and author of the Extortion Act. Prior to the enactment of those laws little was heard of the Bureau of Investigation, as its activities were confined in the main to enforcing the Banking Act, Automobile Theft Act, the White Slave Act, and thefts in interstate commerce. Today the F. B. I., as it is known, under the able leadership of J. Edgar Hoover, is as well, if not better, known than any other Government agency. This is because the passage of the Federal Kidnaping Act served not only to throw the work of the F. B. I. upon a national and international screen, but it also elicited qualities of intelligence, resourcefulness, courage, and character on the part of the members of this organization, which has resulted in bringing a sense of security to the men, women, and children of the country that they did not possess at the time of the passing of the Kidnaping Act.

A few figures will serve to highlight the work of the F. B. I. in these kidnaping cases. Since the passage of this act these men have worked on 154 cases involving this heinous crime. The results have been startling. All but two of the cases have been completely solved, 298 individuals have been convicted, 11 death sentences have been imposed, as well as 42 sentences of life imprisonment, and a total of 3,560 years of prison sentences have also been the result of their efforts. I have no doubt but that it will only be a matter of time when the two remaining cases will be solved, thus enabling this Bureau to maintain a clean slate so far as violations of the Kidnaping Act are concerned. This is only one of the activities of the F. B. I. As I have indicated, however, it is the activity that has come closest to me and one which I have observed with the greatest interest.

I think in considering appropriation figures for this Bureau that Congress may well compare crime conditions as they existed approximately 7 years ago and as they exist today. At that time the country faced problems involving seemingly widespread criminality in all sections of the country. Desperate criminals appeared to have gained the upper hand, because of swift modes of transportation and because local police authorities were unable to follow criminals who could strike and disappear from the local scene. Something akin to demoralization affected the law enforcement organizations of the country at large. It was at that time that Mr. Hoover and the F. B. I. commenced to demonstrate their real value to the peace-loving, law-abiding citizens of the country.

I have spoken of kidnaping. I might well speak of other crimes such as extortion and bank robbery. Apparently some years ago the banking institutions in various sections of the country were at the mercy of these modern exponents of the art of hold-up. A few figures might here serve to illustrate the efficiency of this Bureau better than any encomium that I could express. During 1934 there were 417 bank robberies with a total loot of approximately $2,000,000. In 1938 there were 116 bank robberies and the loot totaled approximately one-half million dollars, representing a reduction of over 72 percent in such cases. As a result of the activities of the F. B. I., assisted by the cooperative efforts of State and local police agencies in bank robbery cases, insurance rates have been reduced in the past 2½ years by 30 percent in most of our States. There can be no better gage of the work of the F. B. I. in cases of this kind than the cold, factual insurance rates, which reflect no sentiment but the hard business judgment of those engaged in this line of activity.

I have referred purposely to these types of cases, the two indicating that this Bureau has made the country safe so far as the personal lives of its citizens are concerned, and the other reflecting that the products of the toil of the country's citizenry have also been rendered substantially more secure.

Just one more instance of the protective guidance and the functioning of this Bureau. As an instance I might cite the initiation by Mr. Hoover and the development and remarkable success of the National Police Academy of the F. B. I., which was started in July 1935. Its purpose has been to inculcate all of the law-enforcement wisdom and scientific lore developed by the Bureau into the minds of law-enforcement officials and organizations in all parts of the country. In other words, all that the Bureau knows, all that it has demonstrated in proven efficacy along law-enforcement lines, has been and is being placed by them at the disposal of law-enforcement officers in all sections of the country, including our largest cities and smallest hamlets. There have been to date 334 graduates, who have returned to their individual sections of the country to transmit to their fellow officers the latest policies and scientific procedure in law enforcement. This has made and this is making our country a safer if not a better place in which to live. This exemplifies that the Federal Bureau of Investigation is, as I have said, not an organization engaged in work which will redound to its own advantage, but one that is ardently desirous of effecting the fullest possible cooperation with law-enforcement officials and organizations in all parts of the country and in all parts of the world. Everything that these men know they have proven themselves only too glad to impart to their less fortunate members of the law-enforcement fraternity elsewhere.

It may be thought that the American people are paying for this protection. Even though that statement were true in all its implications, it would still appear to me to be a true and proper economy.

The safety of the men, women, and children of the country is beyond all computation of monetary costs. However, I would like here to remind my colleagues that this Bureau has proven itself a money-earning as well as money-saving institution. Last year it cost $6,200,000 to operate the Federal Bureau of Investigation. During the same period the total fines imposed, savings and recoveries of property, such as automobiles, ransom money in kidnaping cases, stolen jewelry, stolen bonds, and the like, totaled over forty-seven and one-half million dollars, the country thus receiving over $7.50 for each $1 appropriated for the use of this Bureau.

I believe it only fitting that at this time this tribute be paid to Mr. Hoover and his able and loyal associates.

BUREAU OF PRISONS

Mr. Chairman, I also take a keen interest in the work of the Bureau of Prisons. When the Public Works appropriation was being debated on the floor of this House last year—May 12, 1938, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 6825—I called the attention of the Congress to the rapidly increasing number of Federal prisoners and to the needs of the Federal prison system for additional prison facilities. In the course of my remarks I expressed the hope that the President would see fit to allocate to the Prison Bureau a sufficient appropriation to enable it to overcome the serious overcrowding which existed in its penitentiaries. I am glad to note from the hearings on this bill that the President approved the grant of about $14,000,000 to construct some additional penal and correctional institutions and to provide additional facilities at the existing institutions. That was, it seems to me, a very prudent and forward-looking thing for him to do. Not only did it help to accelerate employment, but it was an investment of Federal funds which would have had to be made in any event. It is a concrete example of the fact that funds spent for sound public improvements of this kind cannot be considered as merely spending for pump-priming purposes. It is the sort of public improvement that every economist would approve as a sound investment.

The Members of this House ought also to note that all of the work authorized by this grant, embracing some 40 different projects, was all under way within 60 days from the date the money was made available. Sites were selected, titles cleared, plans completed, and contracts let within a period of 2 months. This was a big job, considering the size of the projects and the need for allowing bidders sufficient time to figure each job. The Prison Bureau had the very efficient help of the public buildings branch of the Treasury Department. Admiral Peoples and his assistant, Mr. W. E. Reynolds, gave this matter their personal attention and worked shoulder to shoulder with Hon. James V. Bennett, Chief of the Bureau, and his staff to get this program under way. It was this sort of strenuous effort all through the Government service that has made the P. W. A. program such a great success.

The hearings show quite clearly, moreover, that the growth of the Federal prison population has not stopped. When I advocated this construction program a year ago I stated that there were then about 17,250 inmates in our Federal penitentiaries. Today there are 18,350 prisoners, which is, as you will notice, 1,100 in excess of the prison population at this same time last year. The new Federal anticrime statutes have increased measurably the load upon our Federal penal system, and until we can bring the national crime situation under control I can see little hope for diminution in the prison population.

I want to call the attention of the House to the eloquent and informative speech the President made about 4 weeks ago to the National Parole Conference, which was called by Attorney General Murphy at his suggestion. Our Chief Executive reviewed the entire activities of this administration in the field of crime control, parole, and probation. In the course of his remarks, which will be found in the Appendix of the RECORD (p. 1645) he outlined the extent to which the Federal Government had built different kinds of institutions for different kinds of prisoners, ranging from the now famous penitentiary for the most hardened offenders on Alcatraz Island to the unwalled reformatories and camps for the offenders who are less dangerous and who seem to offer real hope for becoming law-abiding citizens. He indicated his approval of the use of every known aid to rehabilitate Federal prisoners and very significantly declared that the primary purpose of the prison is to protect the public by releasing men at the end of their sentences better and not worse than when they were received.

The President also expressed approval of one phase of the Federal prison program to which I have given a great deal of personal attention, when he said that this administration had made it possible to provide useful work for those prisoners who need to learn how to earn an honest living and that this had been done without selling a dollar's worth of prison-made goods on the open market in competition with private industry or free labor. The industrial activities of the Federal prisons are under the control of the Federal Prison Industries, Inc., of which Hon. James V. Bennett is the commissioner, which was established about 4 years ago. This corporation has a board of directors consisting of one representative of industry, one representative of labor, one representative of agriculture, one representative of the consumers, and one representative of the Attorney General. This board of directors, according to its reports, establishes all of the general policies with respect to the kind and the amount of goods made in the Federal prisons. Incidentally, they will grant a hearing to any person who requests it.

I judge from their reports that the prison industries corporation has increased the number of prisoners employed in industrial shops from about 2,400 prisoners in 1935 to nearly 3,300 in 1938. During that period only a few complaints were made by free labor and private industry with respect to the manufacture of goods in Federal prisons. The board seems to have been successful in reaching satisfactory agreements in most cases. For instance, there used to be a great many complaints come to me from private shoe manufacturers in my district about the manufacture of shoes at the Leavenworth Penitentiary.

The prison industries corporation has now established a definite policy as to the amount of shoe orders they will accept and are not expanding their activities. The result has been that the number of complaints have been reduced to a minimum. I just obtained a statement from the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, showing that 1,736,181 pairs of shoes were cleared by that corporation for purchase in commercial markets. This is to be compared with the 376,000 pairs made in the Federal prison during the past year. Almost five times as many shoes purchased by the Federal Government were made by private concerns as were procured from the Leavenworth Penitentiary.

Production of shoes has been held to a prescribed rate, despite the fact that the number of Federal prisoners has been steadily increasing. This shows, it seems to me, that the corporation is doing just what the Congress stipulated it should do, when it said that the corporation must diversify the prison industrial activities and distribute them over as many different kinds of manufacturing as possible. Instead of concentrating in one line of work like shoe manufacturing as the prison population has grown, they have found other means of employing Federal prisoners.

From various reports I have received from constituents as well as from information contained in the annual reports of the Federal Prison Industries, Inc., it appears that this corporation has been one of the outstanding examples of well-managed agencies of the Government and one of the few against which the informed general public has made no criticisms. Incidentally, I wish to point out that no appropriation has been required for the operation of the industrial establishments in the Federal penal and correctional institutions since the corporation has been formed and that today it is in much better financial condition than it was at the time it was organized in January 1935.

I am glad that I had some part in the establishment of this corporation and hope that it may continue to find a solution to the extremely baffling problem of prison labor. I notice that this formerly independent organization has now been placed under the general supervision of the Attorney General, but I judge from a reading of the second reorganization order that it has been placed in the Department of Justice merely for administrative purposes and that it will follow substantially the same methods and policies as heretofore.

It is also noteworthy that one of the very effective things that has been done in recent years in the Federal prison system is the improvement of the medical service. It is also very pleasing to note from the hearings of the committee that the cooperation of the United States Public Health Service and the Bureau of Prisons has been actively and efficiently continued. This cooperative endeavor carries a great deal of significance in the all-important problem of the physical and mental rehabilitation of the offender. It is imperative to the future welfare of this country that this problem be approached in a tactful manner, studied intelligently, and treated with professional skill. It is not enough that the mere physical illnesses of prisoners be casually treated from day to day. The problem of the cause and prevention of crime demands more for its solution than this. It demands an intelligent and scientific program for the correction of remediable diseases, disabilities, and conditions. It also demands skilled psychiatric study and treatment for the men and women sent to prison. Above all, it demands an ever-increasing search for any and all factors that may contribute to delinquency and the discovery of remedies to correct such factors.

The hospital for the insane and seriously ill Federal prisoners is located in my State near Springfield, Mo. This medical center for Federal prisoners is doing some extremely interesting work in the field of mental disease and is making through its researches a real contribution to our knowledge of the mental make-up of those who commit crimes. Its warden, Dr. Marion R. King, has a splendid reputation among the medical profession in Missouri.

I am also glad to see that the Appropriations Committee gave so much consideration to the personnel problems of the Bureau of Prisons. Many of the guards are working long hours and all of them are not receiving all of the annual leave granted them by law. I realize that the committee cannot rectify all of these conditions in a single year in view of the need for economy. I congratulate the chairman and his committee, however, for making a start in bettering the working conditions for the entire personnel of the Bureau of Prisons. From its very able Director down to the least responsible of the institutional positions it is now completely under civil service. Even the wardens and superintendents are career officers. It seems to me that this is a very wise policy, since it removes these hazardous and responsible positions from any political or partisan influence. There was but one case last year, for example, where a prison officer succumbed to bribery or influence. I can remember that not so long ago a prison scandal was not infrequent because the same morale that characterizes the present system was not present.

Moreover, the number of escapes from Federal penal institutions has been reduced to a negligible quantity. Last year less than 20 prisoners out of a total average daily population of over 18,000 escaped, and all of these were from the minimum security prison camps and farms. Not a single man escaped from within the walls of any of the penitentiaries. This is an extremely fine record if it is compared with State institutions. However, in the last analysis the prevention of escape and good prison management depend not upon tool-proof steel bars and mechanical devices but upon honest, intelligent, and courageous personnel of the type we now have in the Federal Prison Service.

I have known Mr. Bennett for many years. I congratulate him on the excellent record he has and is making and thank him especially for his cooperation for releasing to the trade nearly 2,000,000 pairs of shoes which has helped business in my city, St. Louis, as well as given work to many of my constituents.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read a statement which I made to the press on Monday, and also to read a resolution which I entered in the records of the House.

Mr. Chairman, genuine neutrality, or the rule of impartial treatment of all belligerents, is the only policy that has kept and can keep a nation out of war when war comes. This policy kept a number of nations in Europe out of the World War of 1914–18, and it is the policy which is being declared by a number of nations in Europe who are determined not to be involved in the next war.

The United States became involved in the last war because she was not neutral either in purpose or in action. This fact is proved by a mass of incontrovertible evidence.

President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull have committed unneutral acts in Asia and have flagrantly violated the United States Neutrality Act in relation to the Far Eastern conflict. They are now committing acts of political intervention in Europe which are wholly unneutral, and, at the same time, for purposes of their own, have brought great fear of war to the United States.

Such acts of political intervention in Europe will subject the United States to a charge of bad faith in the event that war occurs in Europe and the United States does not enter the war. It is already being charged in neutral countries in Europe that the representations and interventions of President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull are encouraging and promoting war in Europe.

It is without reason and without intelligence for President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull to announce that their actions will remain "actions short of war." Abusive and threatening language, vilification, and aggressive and hostile acts, such as they have indulged in, are the very things that lead to war. A nation that follows such a course is not neutral and must inevitably become involved in war. There will be no escape from it. This is so notwithstanding the fact that today not more than 10 percent of the Members of the Congress would vote for war or favor legislation which they conscientiously believe would lead to war.

We do not need and we should not undertake to stand guard over Europe or the world. We have grave perils at home. We should be on our guard, first, to keep America American and prevent its becoming European or Asiatic; second, to prevent the establishment of a European or Asiatic dictatorship in the United States, which seems the object of the present administration; and, third, to annihilate the collectivism of communism and fascism in domestic and foreign affairs now being promoted by President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull. If American blood must be shed, it were better that it were shed on this continent to effect these purposes. [Applause.]

Joint resolution providing for the reassertion of a foreign policy of genuine neutrality for the United States

Whereas genuine neutrality, or the rule of impartial treatment of all belligerents, is the only policy that has kept and can keep a nation out of war when war comes; and

Whereas this policy kept a number of nations out of the last Great War and is the policy now being declared by a number of nations of Europe who are determined not to be involved in the next war; and

Whereas the United States was not neutral either in purpose or in action during the last Great War, which fact is proved by official documents, and was in consequence disastrously involved in the last war by a series of notes, declarations, and diplomatic interventions; and

Whereas the President of the United States and the Secretary of State have plainly and audaciously violated the United States neutrality law in reference to the present conflict in Asia and have committed unneutral acts in the Far East and acts of political intervention in Europe, which acts must inevitably lead the United States into war; and

Whereas the President and the Secretary of State, by their actions, are encouraging other countries to believe that the United States will support them in their policies and are thereby subjecting the United States to a charge of bad faith if the United States does not support their policies in the event of war; and

Whereas if war does occur in Europe the United States might well be charged, because of its representations and interventions, with having encouraged and promoted war: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Congress reassert its conviction that the only policy by which the United States can avoid war is the traditional American policy of genuine neutrality, and that refusal of the President and the Secretary of State to pursue such a policy is now leading the United States inevitably to war if and when war comes in Europe.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my sincere appreciation to the gentleman from South Carolina for the very splendid manner in which he presided over this subcommittee. He and I entered this House on the same day, and it is an unusual pleasure for me to be closely associated with him in this work on the Appropriations Committee. He is a hard worker, he is fair and just in all the deliberations of this committee. This House and this Nation owes a debt of gratitude to the gentleman from South Carolina, TOM MCMILLAN, for the very splendid services he is rendering. [Applause.] And to the other members of the subcommittee with whom I am associated I also express a word of gratitude and appreciation. They are all sincere and hard working in their deliberations.

It is no easy task to form one of these appropriation bills. Various bureaus and departments come before us requesting increases in appropriations, making very splendid cases in many instances as to the desirability of the increases; but on the other hand, we have an unbalanced Budget, an empty Treasury, and the members of this committee are very hard pressed at times in knowing how to decide.

I desire to speak in behalf of what until recently was considered a virtue—a virtue which we have lost—thrift and economy.

From the dawn of history man has deemed thrift a virtue, for he discovered it to be the only path to progress. He early learned that economy is the mother of abundance. Long before man became civilized, and down through the centuries as he has discovered new lands, developed them, and made them his home, whenever man has been confronted by scarcity in the struggle for existence, he has found it both wise and necessary to save as much as possible for the future. He has always progressed by making the most economical use of what he had by making it go as far as possible in creating more and in providing for future security.

He has always sought to eliminate waste. He has learned to make the most economical use of his own labor and of the materials at his command. This and this alone has been the secret of more efficient production and the creation of plenty.

It was only by the exercise of thrift and economy that man was freed sufficiently from physical toil to have that leisure for thought which lifted him to ever higher intellectual and cultural levels—that raised him above the beasts of the fields to the realms of mental life.

What is the true significance of time and labor-saving devices, of inventions which permit greater production? Is it to enable man to be wasteful of his time and his resources, to be lazy? No. It is rather to free him from certain labors, so that he may go on to others, and thus be able to create ever more and more abundance. Only thus has man developed a culture and achieved an ever higher standard of living. Economy of time and labor and materials is the only known road to prosperity and progress. It is the highway by which civilization itself has advanced.

The same principles that he has learned to follow in his private life man has sought to apply to the affairs of government. Because he knows that he must bear the cost of government in taxes, he has sought to assure its efficient and economical administration.

One of the most significant steps in the development of representative government has been the limitation of the power of the rulers to tax and to spend. It has not been without bloodshed that men have achieved the right to determine the amount of their taxes and how they should be used. In England, the wresting of the control of the Nation's purse strings by the Parliament was one of the greatest triumphs in the limitation of the powers of the King.

The American colonists knew that the power to tax was the power to destroy. With the slogan, "No taxation without representation," they fought a revolution and achieved that representation for themselves as essential to a free people.

They knew that only under a government economically and efficiently administered would freedom be possible; that extravagance would lead to the enslavement of the people under the yoke of oppressive taxation. They realized that extravagance feeds upon extravagance and power upon power. And, recognizing this human weakness, they knew that the power over the spending of huge public sums was fully as dangerous in the hands of an elected official as in those of a despotic ruler.

In the campaign of 1932 the ideas of thrift and economy were eloquently echoed and championed by Candidate Roosevelt.

He knew then that the burden of the cost of government is borne by all of the people.

Taxes—

He declared—

are paid in the sweat of every man who labors, because they are a burden on production and are paid through production. If excessive, they are reflected in idle factories, tax-sold farms, and hence in hordes of the hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain. Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay in deductions from wages, in increased costs of what they buy, or in broad cessation of employment.

Candidate Roosevelt knew, too, that democracy cannot long endure save on a sound financial basis.

Too often in recent history—

He warned—

liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

And yet today those who preach these truths are voices crying in the wilderness of extravagance, debt, and taxes. For 6 years we have mocked these virtues and scorned these eternal truths as outworn. For 6 years we have constantly clamored for Congress to spend ever more and more. Ironically, we have done so in the name of the people. Vast blanket appropriations with arbitrary power over their allocation have been the rule. The more the Government spends, the more liberal and humanitarian it is considered. Self-seeking political soothsayers have told us that we can spend our way to prosperity.

Today the fears expressed by Jefferson have been largely realized. Reports from nearly every State in the Union constantly bring fresh evidence that corruption, coercion, and intimidation have crept into the administration of relief; bureaucrats have fastened themselves like leeches upon the public pay roll, determined to perpetuate themselves in power; debt and high taxes reign—all in the name of the people. And the people are paying dearly for it.

We have forgotten the words of Jefferson that "If we can prevent the Government from wasting the labors of the people under the pretense of taking care of them, they must become happy." Instead, we demand more and more, piling deficit upon deficit, not only burdening ourselves but bequeathing to future generations a heritage of debt.

Somehow, word went around that Uncle Sam was Santa Claus. Every parent knows only too well that the expense of Christmas must be met out of the family pocketbook. It is high time that we stop believing in a Federal Santa Claus and realize that the governmental expenses must be paid from the national income.

As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] declared in a recent speech to the district attorneys:

You States come up here and ask for more and more money. Where does it come from? It comes from the pockets of your own people. We are signing the names of your children and of children yet unborn to pay off that $40,000,000,000 debt. * * * You people out there look to Washington, but I look to the people. If the time ever comes when the American people are no longer able to operate their democratic system of government, that Government will have to find a Hitler or a Mussolini to do its business.

We get the money from you and even you don't get it all back. * * * We take your shirt and give you a little piece of the shirt tail. Then you go back home waving it and shouting, "Look what Uncle Sam gave me."

And so we go blithely on our way, facing the tenth consecutive year of astronomical deficit.

Does any man think that he can run his personal finances in this manner? Does any man think he can borrow his way into prosperity? How long does any man think he could continue to spend twice as much as he makes? Does any businessman operate on the principle that the more he spends the more he will increase the purchasing power of others to buy his goods? Does anyone believe that to do so adds so much as a single penny to the total national wealth?

Mr. Chairman, it is high time that we awaken from this delusion, this spending spree in which we have indulged. Not only have we placed upon ourselves the burden of staggering taxes, but we have run the public debt up to the limit allowed by law.

Surely this a warning signal, a red light telling us to stop. Surely it is time to stop, look, and listen. Are we going to face the cold facts of reality or are we to continue this break-neck speed until we crash?

How are we to meet the situation? Does any responsible person advocate that we inaugurate inflation? Does any intellectually honest person believe that it can be solved by raising the debt limit? Does anyone propose that taxes be raised to meet our present rate of spending?

You and I know that there is only one answer. The longer we put off facing the fact, the more cruel will be the day of reckoning.

We must begin to live within our income. We must tighten our belts and give up every extravagance, every unnecessary expense. Like the prodigal son, we must confess the error of our ways and repent. By stern self-discipline we must recapture the virtue of frugality.

At this point a great hue and cry will be raised, "Will you let people starve?" This is evading the issue. No one advocates such a program.

The real question is, "How long do you propose to keep people on relief while you continue to throttle business? How long will you refuse to free the flow of idle capital into private industry, which alone can provide employment?"

The real question is, "How long will you continue to give to the people with one hand, while with the other you pick their pockets?"

If direct taxes were to be substituted for the myriad of hidden taxes, every individual in the land would know just exactly what the Government was costing him. A cry for economy would go up which would be irresistible. As it is few citizens realize that 22 cents of every dollar they spent last year was swallowed up by taxes, even though they never saw an income-tax blank.

Mr. Chairman, there are few today who still believe that we can pump prime our way to prosperity. Heaven knows we have tried it and have been sadly disillusioned by its failure. More and more the people are awakening to the fact that, as one constituent wrote his Senator, "You can no more spend yourself into prosperity than you can drink yourself sober."

We in Congress have talked much of the necessity for economy. But what have we done about it? We proclaim ourselves in favor of economy with one breath, and with the next urge vast appropriations for projects in which we are personally interested. We call for economy, but no one is willing to make the first move, save at the other fellow's expense.

We adopted the spending policy as an emergency measure to help us get out of the depression. The depression is still with us, and the spending habit is becoming fixed. Everyone recognizes the need for economy, but no one is willing to take the lead. In fact, many are beginning to adopt a defeatist attitude toward our desire to curtail spending.

The mayor of New York testified recently before a congressional committee that he believed relief would have to continue for the next 9 or 10 years. Does anyone believe that we could stand such a burden? The mayor himself evaded this question with a wisecrack.

Mr. Chairman, the peoples of the world tremble today in the fear that they will once again be thrown into a general conflict, one which would be far more disastrous and destructive than the last, not only in loss of life but morally, socially, financially, and economically.

In 1917 we had practically no public debt. That war cost us over $40,000,000,000, and brought on the worst depression the world has ever known. Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, who was in charge of the draft during that war, has stated that had the war lasted another year the Treasury was planning to spend twenty-four billions in the fiscal year 1919. Mr. B. M. Baruch, however, who was Chairman of the War Industries Board, estimated that the spending for that year would have been "nearer thirty-five billions."

The next world war will be even more costly and result in a far worse depression. Can any mind conceive of the ruin which would result if such a catastrophe should be added to our present public debt, which is now rapidly approaching forty-five billions?

But, worst of all, the true cost of our extravagance cannot be measured in terms of dollars and cents.

What must be the moral effect upon our citizens who are taught that to be unemployed is no great hardship because one can always live on the Government? Does this not lead to the degenerating psychology of dependency and shirking of responsibility? What example does the Government set its citizens when Federal funds are recklessly squandered? What incentive is there for the individual to live frugally and to save for the future if his savings are to be eaten up in taxes?

"Eat, drink, and be merry," is the lesson, "for tomorrow the Federal Government will care for you."

Mr. Chairman, "When I was a child I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man I put away childish things." I learned that I was held responsible for my acts; I learned to stand on my own feet and depend upon myself.

But today, it seems, these lessons are no longer taught. Today political parties preach the gospel of dependency upon the Government and base their campaigns on boasts of what they have given the citizen in the past and on promises of what they will give him in the future.

What is to become of the initiative, industry, and independence of a people who once prided themselves on these virtues? What can be the result of such a policy, save to corrode the national character?

Again, what must be the effect of Federal extravagance upon the citizen engaged in a business who sees the money taken from him in taxes used to finance Government projects in direct competition with his business? What could be more dangerous to the success of a system of private economy?

The stability of any economy must depend upon the financial stability of the government. Continued wasteful and extravagant living beyond income impairs confidence in the credit of a government as surely as it destroys faith in the credit of an individual.

Add to this the broad discretionary powers over our monetary system possessed by the President. Is not the fear justified that an administration which plunges the people into the mire of debt may resort to financial juggling to evade its obligations?

Because no man can say that our Federal credit will collapse or that ruinous monetary panaceas will be employed this year or next year or the year after, is this any excuse for us to pursue our reckless course until the breaking point is reached?

In these turbulent times, we can meet this challenge only by making democracy succeed. We can do so only by setting our house in order morally, spiritually, economically, and financially.

The entire blame for the present situation cannot be placed upon Congress. Every year new groups are formed for the purpose of exerting pressure upon Congress, of exploiting the Federal Treasury. People talk economy, but they want to get as much as possible of the gravy if it is being passed out.

As a distinguished Senator from Mississippi told a recent convention:

> There isn't a project desired at Squedunk or Yellow Rabbit or Vinegar Bend, whether it be a recreational lake or sanitary rendezvous, whether it be for the deepening of the Oakahay or regulation of the Tallapoosa, or the creation of rural route No. 18, that your local chamber of commerce does not meet and resolute and frighten with the fire of your influence the Congressman or Senator representing that bailiwick to obtain the approval and appropriation for the project.
>
> Frankness compels me to admit—

The Senator stated—> that the difficult task of retrenchment in Government expenditures cannot be accomplished without the active interest, encouragement, and support of the citizens of the country. If economies are to be employed by this Government—if expenditures are to be reduced, it will be because such a sentiment has been created back home and the demands made upon Congress for such a policy.

But Congress, because it is the representative of the people, must take the lead. How is it to begin? Where is it to cut? The answer is, a little everywhere.

We have become so accustomed to talking in the astronomical terms of billions—sums so vast that the mind cannot comprehend their significance—that we have lost all sense of proportion. Hundreds of thousands and millions are now granted so glibly and freely that they soon mount into more billions. We cannot, of course, begin to save billions all at once. But we can start cutting the hundreds of thousands and millions until our expenses begin to balance more nearly with our income.

One of Candidate Roosevelt's most eloquent campaign pleas in 1932 was:

Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits. Stop the deficits!

Does any Member of Congress doubt that this move is essential to economic recovery? Does any Member of Congress doubt that such a step is necessary to preserve our national credit? Does any Member of Congress doubt that failure to make this move will bring ruin and disaster to all of our people, rich and poor, employed and unemployed, young and old alike?

Agreed in this, when are we going to begin to do what we all know must be done? Are we lacking in the intellectual honesty and the moral fiber to face the situation squarely? Have we the courage and the vision to adopt such a program and put it into action, even if it means sacrificing the post office in Squedunk or the bridge over the Tallapoosa in our own districts?

Do not misunderstand me. All appropriations are not to be stopped. Those on relief must be cared for, but we must be sure that money intended for them is received by them. Matters of national defense must be provided for. I am a firm believer in national defense and the keeping up of our Navy. I do not believe, however, that our Navy must be sustained on Argentine beef; in fact, I believe we have just as good beef here in the United States to feed our fighting men as can be found anywhere in the world. [Applause.] I may say in passing that I am in favor of protecting our cattlemen. I come from the West where we have a large cattle industry. While I am solicitous about protecting the cattlemen of the West I am just as solicitous about protecting every other industry that suffers from foreign competition.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What about our beet-sugar industry in Michigan that is being put out of business?

Mr. CARTER. I am in favor of protecting against foreign competition and foreign cheap labor every industry in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we must have this intellectual honesty and moral fiber, we must have this courage and wisdom if we are ever again to have prosperity in this country. But it is not material welfare alone that is at stake, or that we must seek.

Our spiritual life is at stake. We must seek first a recovery of the hardy virtues of the pioneers—courage, independence, industry, and thrift. These virtues, by which they made this country great, became known the world over as characteristic of the American people. They are a priceless part of our tradition and heritage.

Our economic life is at stake. We must seek first the recovery of our free system of private enterprise, by putting our financial house in order, by releasing business from the burden of oppressive taxation and the competition of the Government, that it may once more go forward, as the only way of true progress.

Constitutional government itself is at stake. We must seek first a recovery of the American ideal of a government which helps its citizens to help themselves, which creates a social, economic, and spiritual atmosphere in which they may go forward together through voluntary cooperation, instead of being doomed to dependency upon Federal bounty. This is our greatest, indeed, our only hope that a free nation will endure.

Upon our wisdom in seeking and our success in achieving these things depends the future of the Nation. Our wisdom and our success will determine whether or not America will once more advance as she has always done in the past. They will determine whether or not we will pass on to future generations of Americans yet unborn a happy, prosperous nation, and the sacred heritage of the American tradition. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, many weeks of hearings, followed by long hours of preparing the appropriation bill for the three Departments, namely, State, Justice, and Commerce, puts a faithful, though tired, committee in the position to present this measure to the House today. I would be negligent in my duty failing to say a word in praise of the membership of the committee, consisting of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN], and my Democratic colleagues, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McANDREWS], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR], also our two Republican associates, the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN]. Truly this group of seven went to work with a will, with a view toward justice to the Departments, and with determination to guard and protect the Public Treasury.

There was no politics in the committee, and the devotion to duty of our able clerk, Mr. Jack McFall, has been attested to time and time again by the individual members of our committee.

The amount recommended in the bill for 1940 is $121,399,120. This sum is an increase of $26,691,315 over 1939, but is a decrease under the Budget estimate of $2,970,083. The break-down for the various departments is conveniently arranged in the report.

Two items constitute a substantial part of the increase, namely $20,000,000 for the decennial census, and $3,000,000 for needed facilities for the Bureau of Prisons.

The committee is pleased to report a recognized improvement in the use of the communication service in the Departments, resulting from notice in past hearings before the committee that this service must be supervised and the cost lowered.

The bill considers and provides for many subdivisions of government in the three Departments, but I am anxious to confine my consideration to the Bureau of Prisons and the inmates of penal and correctional institutions of the Federal Government. It is indeed shocking to learn the part that youth plays annually in the age group of persons arrested.

Age:	Arrests
16	10,984
17	17,276
18	23,900
19	23,877
20	20,844
21	24,295
22	24,287
23	23,968
24	22,359

This subject of youth is deserving of much further consideration especially when considered from the angle of the educational system and its cost in this Nation. There are two major expenses in America, one the educational system, and the second the Department of Justice. In a certain sense the failure of one casts a burden upon the other. I am reminded of the phrase, "As ye sow, so shall ye reap." No wonder the New York Times, in a prominent first-page article on April 30, said:

"Disloyalty purge" of teachers asked. New York teachers were called upon to cleanse their ranks of all disloyal members and to disband and drive out of the public school system any group or organization not standing for 100-percent Americanism.

President Roosevelt in April, at the Conference on Children, emphasized religion and pointedly said:

> We are concerned about the children who are outside the reach of religious influence and are denied help in obtaining faith in an ordered universe and in the fatherhood of God.

And Monsignor Keegan said:

> The responsibility of democracy is to fortify the young against paganism.

I have also been impressed, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, with the testimony of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, which shows a very considerable increase in the number of Federal prisoners over the last several years. If you will refer to the testimony, you will see that the number has grown continually since 1925, with the exception of a brief period immediately following the repeal of the Prohibition Act. Today there are 18,350 men and women in the Federal penal and correctional institutions. This is about 1,100 in excess of the number in prison the same time last year and more than 2,000 in excess of the average prison population 2 years ago. Our prison population is growing rapidly enough to fill one new prison every year.

The number of men and women sent to State institutions has also shown a continually upward trend in the past decade. There were 107,532 men and women in State prisons and reformatories on December 31, 1930, and on that same date in 1937 there were 134,633 prisoners. Think of it, in a 7-year period there was an increase of about one-third in our State prison population. The same thing has occurred, as I have said, in our Federal prison system.

This is an alarming situation, it seems to me, although I recognize that the increase of Federal prisoners is due to a considerable extent to the widening scope of Federal criminal jurisdiction and to the energetic anticrime program inaugurated by this administration. But the steady increase in the number of all prisoners is a matter of grave concern. Our prison population in ratio to the general population is very much in excess of that of England, France, Italy, and even Germany if the political prisoners are not counted. In all of England and Wales, for instance, there are less than 10,000 prisoners—about the same number as we have in the State of California alone. France had in 1932 but 50 prisoners per 100,000 of general population, whereas we had about 175, or 3½ times as many. It is time, it seems to me, to have a stock taking and find out whether our people really are more lawless, whether we have too many laws, whether our courts are giving too long sentences, or just what is wrong.

The phase of the problem which interests me most is the question of crime among our youth. You will notice in the testimony of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons that he does not find that there has been a disproportionate increase in the number of juvenile offenders. He seems to think that in view of the temptations of our modern social and economic order the youth of today has displayed a most commendable moral fiber. He points out that there are between four and five million young persons between the ages of 16 and 25 out of school and out of work and yet there has been no great increase in the number of crimes most typical of juvenile offenders. He does not deny, however, that the problem of juvenile delinquency is a serious one which demands a reappraisal of our family and community attitudes and resources.

It is time, it seems to me, that we were doing something about the crime situation besides building more prisons and continuing along in the same old ways. We have got to bring the matter closer home and to bring it about that the churches, the schools, and the other social agencies do something to prevent crime. We cannot do the job from Washington. Crime must be combated locally. Furthermore, it cannot be successfully combatted if we content ourselves with punishing people after they have committed an offense. We must find ways and means in our own communities to help people before they have come in conflict with the law and weed out those conditions and those forces which bring about delinquency.

If you will look at the hearings you will see that there are now nearly 30,000 persons under the supervision of the Federal probation officers. You will also see in the testimony that when this statement was made, after hours of discouraging testimony about the growth in the population of the Federal prison system, I remarked that this was the one encouraging note in the Government's correctional program. Instead of sending everybody who gets into Federal court to prison, we are now trying to keep them in their own community and salvage the good there may be in them through constructive and enlightened probation service. Furthermore, the United States probation officers not only work with the individuals under their supervision but throughout the Nation they are working with local social agencies and welfare forces. In this way our probation service is not only a method of correction but a positive force in the prevention of crime.

Our committee has been most anxious to improve the Federal probation system and we have granted as many of the requests for additional personnel as possible in view of the serious economic condition of the country. We know that the probation officers are a great help to the court in furnishing them with information about defendants whose cases must be acted upon by the judge. I am glad to say that an increasing number of Federal judges are asking for presentence reports before they pronounce sentence. If more of them would do this and could find the time to give more consideration to each individual defendant, there would be less disparity in the actions of the various courts. The widely different practices and policies of the Federal courts in the sentencing of Federal offenders has thrown into sharp relief the magnitude of this problem. For example, the percentage of convicted offenders who were placed on probation during the past year varied from none at all in some districts to a maximum of nearly 80 percent in other districts. The same crime in one jurisdiction will mean probation or a light sentence, and almost exactly the same offense in a neighboring jurisdiction may mean a period of from 5 to 10 years in the penitentiary. No wonder that the Director of the Bureau of Prisons testified as to the acuteness of the disciplinary problem created in his institutions by the fact that prisoners feel they are not being treated equally.

We have also made during the past year, it seems to me, one very real improvement in the manner of handling those who commit Federal offenses when we enacted a Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act in the closing days of the last session. This act provides a procedure for the disposition of the cases of youthful offenders by informal methods analogous to State juvenile courts. The act makes it possible to keep the juvenile out of unsanitary, improperly supervised jails, expedites action on the case, and eliminates the possibility of stigmatizing the juvenile by trying him in open court.

During the present fiscal year over 400 juveniles were disposed of under this new procedure. It was possible for the courts to make arrangements for retaining approximately half of those found guilty on probation or in foster homes in their local communities rather than transporting them to some distant institution. It seems to me that this is a very forward-looking procedure and ought to go far in saving many young offenders from becoming confirmed criminals. It has received the approbation of every Federal judge except one. Only one Federal judge declines to take advantage of its terms.

The act has, however, thrown an increasing burden upon the probation officers, and I hope that as time goes on we will be able to provide sufficient staff to make it possible to give this same constructive attention to the case of every juvenile who gets into Federal court.

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Committee, the problem of crime is one which challenges our social structure. It cannot be brushed aside and forgotten. We must find some way to stop the upward trend of State and Federal prison population.

Mr. Chairman, in the extension of my remarks I intend to deal with youth in crime and to set forth an outline for correction, for the salvation of youth that should be saved, too late when it has found its way to the penitentiary.

OUTLINE—YOUTH IN CRIME

I. Importance of youth problem in crime.
  A. Statistics clearly indicate scope of the problem.
    1. During calendar year 1938 youths under 21 years of age responsible for:
      a. 18.8 percent of all known arrests for all types of offenses.
      b. 12 percent of all arrests for criminal homicides.
      c. 28.5 percent of all arrests for robberies.
      d. 43.5 percent of all arrests for burglaries.
      e. 31.7 percent of all arrests for larcenies.
      f. 52.3 percent of all arrests for auto thefts.
  B. From the above figures it is evident that the predominance of youth in crime is not a hypothetical but an actual situation.

II. Need for education of youth to recognize the stark realities of crime.
  A. Youth must be taught and convinced of the futility of crime.
  B. Parents must be brought to realize their responsibilities in rearing children.
    1. Old-fashioned parental discipline notably lacking.
    2. Immature minds cannot be granted utter freedom without disastrous results.
    3. Tendency for parents to take the side of the child when he is in the wrong.
    4. All major criminals started their careers by committing petty offenses.
  C. Need for intelligent handling of juvenile delinquents by the courts and law-enforcement officers.
    1. Reformatories should serve to set the delinquent on the right path again, and not teach him new criminal methods through association with incorrigibles.
    2. Probation system must be intelligently supervised and the personnel must be of a high caliber if results are to be obtained.
  D. The success of youth organizations as a juvenile-crime deterrent.
    1. Boys' clubs sponsored by police departments as the Metropolitan Police Department in Washington, D. C., have been remarkably successful in reducing juvenile crime.
    2. Boy Scout troops organized for the underprivileged youth under sponsorship of police, parent-teacher, and religious groups eminently successful.
    3. Big Brother movements in western cities have met with great success.
    4. Police athletic leagues, or "PAL" leagues, as they are called have proven very successful in several large eastern cities.

III. Proper religious influences can assist greatly in combating juvenile crime.
  A. Crimes not committed for antisocial reasons but are due to total lack of moral responsibility.
    1. Proper religious training develops moral character.
  B. Formation of boys' and girls' clubs under intelligent supervision, with wholesome athletic and educational programs.
    1. The old-fashioned picnics, pie suppers, and similar activities are all too rare occurrences today in the larger towns and cities, although still very successful in rural communities.
  C. Father and son activities not adequately stressed.

IV. Field of juvenile delinquency and prevention of crime by youths a fertile one, and endeavors in this direction will pay big dividends in the future of the Nation.
  A. As a result of our derelictions in past there has arisen in the country a criminal army which today numbers 4,750,000.
  B. A substantial reduction in juvenile delinquency will materially alter the crime problem of tomorrow.
  C. Need for every parent to interest himself and herself in modern youth.
    1. The various adult activities today taking too much of the parents' time away from the child has had decided influence on youth in crime.
  D. Juvenile-crime prevention is something every citizen should zealously support and actively participate in to make America an even better place to live in.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

THE GOOD NEIGHBOR

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, I ask your indulgence today to make some pertinent observations concerning our good-neighbor policy. President Roosevelt and his administration in speaking of the good-neighbor policy refer more especially to our foreign policy with the Latin American nations of the West Indies, Central and South America.

The term "neighbor" is an institution that belongs to the rural sections of our country, and we have always had good neighbors, poor neighbors, and bad neighbors. A good neighbor was considered the person living near to us who, in time of need, was ready and willing to help. We could borrow a cup of sugar, some meal, flour, or soda, and sometimes a coal of fire, a plow, mule, or wagon. To be known as a good neighbor was a coveted honor. A person was not considered a good neighbor unless he was willing to reciprocate when circumstances required.

The good-neighbor expression as applied to our Latin American foreign policy was not conceived by this administration. As I recall, the late Honorable Elihu Root, when Secretary of State, frequently used the same expression.

Now, in Kentucky it is a fine thing to be neighborly and to help one's neighbors, but it is equally incumbent upon the other party to be neighborly. No act could bring the neighbor in ill repute and so quickly attach to him the opprobrium of bad neighbor as to borrow and not return or to take from his neighbor that which did not belong to him. I inquire, Have our neighboring countries to the south been and are they now good neighbors?

BILLIONS LOANED—NOTHING RETURNED

We loaned large sums to the allied countries during the World War, and we now complain bitterly because they have defaulted and, with the exception of Finland, have failed to pay either the principal or interest. Now, what about our Latin American neighbors?

These Latin American countries issued nearly $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds. They sold them to American citizens. A million or more American citizens now own these bonds. The following is a list of the countries and the amount of bonds sold to our citizens, and the amount in default:

Country	Total amount of dollar bonds sold	Total dollar bonds in default
Brazil	$357,071,745	$357,071,745
Mexico	273,696,054	273,696,054
Chile	216,069,500	216,069,500
Columbia	146,699,305	143,649,900
Peru	85,656,500	85,656,500
Bolivia	61,005,639	61,005,639
Uruguay	58,192,100	58,192,100
Cuba	82,503,100	40,000,000
Panama	19,562,943	14,270,443
Ecuador	12,262,700	12,262,700
El Salvador	10,901,825	10,901,825
Costa Rica	10,489,351	10,489,351
Guatemala	5,535,084	3,854,084

You will observe these 13 countries have defaulted on both principal and interest for more than $1,200,000,000. Some of these defaults have only been a few years and others for 30 years.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know that, due to the fact a great many of the banks, especially in the South, purchased these South American bonds, it contributed materially to their failure sometime ago?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; that is the information I have.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I know personally of some banks that failed on account of the purchase of these South American bonds.

ASKING FOR MORE

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Recently there has started a parade of these Latin American countries to the United States Treasury. One of the leaders in the parade is Brazil. Brazil sold to our citizens her Government bonds amounting to $357,071,745. She has defaulted on interest, as well as the sinking fund. She has quit paying either principal or interest. Brazil a few weeks ago sent her Foreign Minister, Mr. Aranha, to secure more loans and credits. It is not definitely known what arrangements were made by Mr. Aranha with our Government. He secured, according to statements made by leading Democratic Senators on the floor of the Senate and the press and other sources of information, a promise of loans and credits ranging between $40,000,000 and $120,000,000. Some Democratic Senators denounced the proposals of our Government to extend to Brazil further credit. It is most interesting to read the press reports of the statement issued by Foreign Minister Aranha when he returned to Brazil. He said:

We accomplished what was up to us to do, i. e., brought back assurance of credit. Brazil gave nothing in exchange because we had nothing to give. It is true that I stated the Government contemplated resuming payment in July on the bonds. My purpose in making this statement was to tranquilize the [United States] holders of our bonds—more than a million persons. I have always, however, subordinated this moral obligation to pay to the material capacity to do so. I have already stated that in our agreements we are not obliged to purchase in the United States and it is obvious that we can only do so when the terms are favorable to us.

Mr. Aranha boasts of the fact that he got what he came after—credit—and that Brazil gave nothing in exchange. He admits that he gave out the statement in the United States while he was here that his Government, Brazil, contemplated resuming payment in July on these defaulted Brazilian bonds. He says his purpose in making these statements was to "tranquilize" or, in other words, pacify the more than a million American citizens who are holding the defaulted $357,071,745 of bonds and interest of the Brazilian Government. Mr. Aranha also states:

I have always, however, subordinated this moral obligation to pay to the material capacity to do so.

An individual or nation owing an honest debt, if he or it comes to the conclusion to disregard the moral obligation, it is very easy indeed to think up the excuse of incapacity to pay.

From what source is Brazil to secure this money? A new agency was set up by the New Deal administration—Commodity Credit Corporation. Congress gave this Commodity Credit Corporation the power to loan $500,000,000. The Commodity Credit Corporation gets the money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation gets the money from the United States Treasury, and of course the money gets into the Treasury when taken from the pockets of the taxpayers of this country.

The chief purpose of the Commodity Credit Corporation has been and is to encourage trade between the United States and the Latin American countries, but what did Mr. Aranha say when he got back home?

We are not obliged to purchase in the United States and it is obvious that we can only do so when the terms are favorable to us.

The unusual favors granted to these Latin American countries have been based largely on the idea it will open up new markets for our people and increase our trade in those countries. Let us see what has been accomplished in Brazil.

From January 1, 1936, to March 31, 1939, we exported to Brazil $196,250,000 worth of products, but during the same period of time Brazil shipped into our country (and most of it in competition with American farmers and industries) $346,000,000 worth of products. Our Nation has loaned to Brazil nearly $2 for each dollar of trade we have had from Brazil since January 1, 1936. Brazil merely says that if we will loan her some more of the taxpayers' money she will buy some American products, provided the terms are more favorable to her, and while she considers the repayment of this money a moral obligation, yet the moral obligation is subordinated to the material capacity of Brazil to pay. Using American money to buy American goods, she can and does use her own money to buy in Germany, Japan, and other countries at cheaper prices.

Brazil and other South American countries are buying, and will buy, an increased amount of machinery and equipment to make shoes, textiles, and other manufactured products. Brazil is rapidly becoming our great competitor in the production of cotton—in fact, she ships some of her long-staple cotton into the United States. We are financing our competitors as we did in sending our machinery and equipment to Japan, Russia, and other countries, and then sent our ablest men into those countries to show the Russians, Japanese, and others how to use and finally how to duplicate American machinery and equipment; and now, with their cheap labor and low standards of living, they become vital competitors of industry, agriculture, and labor of this country.

We should remind Brazil that a good neighbor always pays back, and a good neighbor does not like to loan sugar, coffee, flour, and meal when the borrower forgets to return that which he borrowed.

OUR NEIGHBOR MEXICO

The Mexican Government issued $273,696,054 of bonds and sold these bonds to American citizens. Mexico has been in partial default on the interest on these bonds since 1913 and in total default since 1919. In other words, Mexico has not paid anything on the principal and interest of this debt since 1919. Thousands of American citizens are holding these defaulted bonds of Mexico.

We have done more than this for Mexico. From January 1, 1936, to March 31, 1939, we exported to Mexico $267,000,000 worth of American products, and Mexico has shipped into this country $175,000,000 of cattle, hides, and other products. For every dollar of balance of trade in our favor, we loaned to Mexico $3 on which she has defaulted, both as to the principal and the interest.

Under the Silver and Gold Purchase Acts of 1934 this Nation has been not only a good neighbor but a Santa Claus to Mexico. We have bought all of her silver at nearly double its market value and her gold at $35 an ounce when it is worth less than $21 an ounce. We have paid to Mexico millions and millions of dollars in silver and gold subsidies and in this way have provided employment for tens of thousands of Mexicans and have preserved the economic life of that country.

While we were performing these unusually neighborly acts of generosity and being a real Santa Claus, the Mexican Government forcibly took over millions of acres of oil lands, both developed and undeveloped property, machinery and equipment. The crude oil produced on these properties owned by American citizens in 1937 was 8,739,000 barrels. These properties taken by Mexico from American citizens have an approximate value of $200,000,000.

We loaned Mexico hundreds of millions of our dollars, we paid her tens of millions in subsidies, and now this good neighbor (?) takes by force the property of American citizens. She has not returned one cent of the loans, she has not returned these lands unlawfully and forcibly taken; neither has she paid one cent of compensation. To add insult to injury, Mexico has been taking the oil belonging to American citizens and has been exchanging this oil with Germany and Japan for machinery and other products. Mexico takes our property and turns it over to those nations that have been threatening the peace and security of our country and the world.

Mr. COX. And we stood by and saw that done with nothing more than a mild protest from the Department of State, which the notoriously "Red" Smith, of the Labor Board, negatived in his appearance in the bull pen at a meeting of Mexicans some months ago.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. In Kentucky we would consider an individual doing such acts a very, very bad neighbor.

ECUADOR

Ecuador issued $12,262,700 of bonds and sold them to citizens of America. She has been in total default of these bonds and interest ever since 1915. Ecuador, following the example of our good neighbor Mexico, has taken over by force oil properties belonging to American citizens, and she has exchanged a lot of this oil to Germany for machinery and equipment to enlarge the development of these stolen American properties. Our trade policy with Ecuador has brought very wonderful (?) results. From January 1, 1936, to April 1, 1939, this country has exported to Ecuador a little over $12,000,000 of products, but at the same time Ecuador has shipped into this country approximately $11,000,000 worth of products. It would now require every dollar of exports and imports between the United States and Ecuador since January 1, 1936, to match the debt and interest that Ecuador owes the people of the United States on her defaulted bonds.

NICARAGUA

A few days ago our administration put on a big show to receive President Somoza, the dictator of Nicaragua. We called out the Army, Navy, and our air force. President Somoza said that his country desired a loan of $20,000,000 and stated that he was anxious to build up trade between this country and Nicaragua.

From January 1, 1936, to March 13, 1939, we exported from this country to Nicaragua approximately $9,500,000 of products and Nicaragua shipped into this country about the same amount.

President Somoza indicated that he would like for the United States to build a great interoceanic canal across his country, connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific. Of course, this would cost hundreds of millions of dollars and would be a great thing—for Nicaragua.

Of course, Nicaragua, if we loaned her money, no doubt, like some other of our good neighbors to the south, will take her time in paying the money back.

Our trade with South America has fallen off 40 or 50 percent, and the balance of trade on the whole is against the United States. This administration has entered into reciprocal-trade agreements with Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, and Guatemala, removing the trade barriers between them and this country, and this gives all other Latin American countries equal treatment, so that they can ship their oil, fruits, meats, hides, tallow, cotton, cottonseed oil, and hundreds of other articles into our country in competition with American producers.

I wish to emphasize that we have not only been a good neighbor to the Latin American countries but we have been a real "sugar daddy" to them. President Somoza addressed the House of Representatives and devoted much of his speech to the beauties and glories of a democratic form of government. He is just as much a dictator as Hitler or Mussolini, and 15 of the 20 Latin American countries are dictatorships and are ruled over by men that are as much dictators as Hitler or Stalin. There are only two or three of the Latin American countries whose governments in fact approach to any very great degree our republican form of government or what we understand as democracy.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Referring to this little vest-pocket dictator from Nicaragua, he not only drove his own uncle out of office and seized his place but exiled him from the country.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is the story.

Now, take our good neighbor Cuba, which got a loan here of $80,000,000 and has defaulted on $40,000,000 of it. What about her trade? From January 31, 1936, to March 31, 1939, Cuba shipped into your country and mine $403,314,000 worth of products. We shipped to Cuba only $255,000,000 worth of products. They are shipping in from Cuba nearly $2 worth of products to $1 worth that we ship into Cuba. She has the best of the bargain in trade.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Kentucky 5 additional minutes.

THE ARGENTINE

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, since January 1, 1936, to March 31, 1939, we have exported to Argentina less than $250,000,000 worth of American products. During the same period of time we imported from Argentina nearly $270,000,000 worth of Argentine products, and nearly all of it in direct competition with American farmers and producers—corn, wheat, hides, meats, fruits, and so forth. Last year there was brought into this country from foreign countries about 30,000,000 beef hides, and about 78,000,000 pounds of canned beef, and most of these came in from Argentina.

PRESIDENT SAYS ARGENTINE CANNED BEEF "INFINITELY BETTER"

Unless this administration reverses its policy and discontinues its discrimination against American beef and other products, the imports from Argentina into this country as well as from other countries will increase. Congress passed an act—"Buy American." It required our public officials to buy materials, supplies, and products from American producers. The United States Navy desired to buy canned beef. Argentina as well as the United States submitted bids to furnish this beef. The President is given the power to set aside the Buy American Act when, in his judgment, he feels justified in doing so. The President turned down the proposal of American producers to furnish this canned beef to the Navy. He set aside the Buy American Act and awarded the contract to the Argentine Meat Producers Cooperative, a cooperative packing concern of the Argentine in South America. The President, on being asked why he had set aside this law and turned down the American bids and accepted the Argentine bid, assigned three reasons, according to press reports:

(1) The Argentine product was infinitely superior in quality to the American product.

(2) The enlisted men of the Navy were entitled to the best quality.

(3) The Argentine producers were the lowest bidders for the Navy contract.

This announcement caused great rejoicing in Argentina, but it blew the lid off in this country. The cattle and stock raising associations and farm groups throughout the country denounced the action of the President, but as the matter now stands the Navy boys will eat South American canned beef instead of our canned beef.

Is the South American canned beef better than ours? Under the orders of our Government South American cattle and South American beef carcasses cannot be shipped into this country because of the hoof-and-mouth disease prevalent in Argentina among their cattle. Our Government was so concerned that it would not permit the Argentine Government to bring beef carcasses and cook the beef in the Argentine building at the New York World's Fair. If the hoof-and-mouth disease is such a menace to the Argentine cattle and Argentine beef that none of it is permitted to be brought into this country unless it is canned, I am at a loss to understand why the President should select it over American canned beef when there is no claim that our cattle are affected with the hoof-and-mouth disease.

It seems to me that if the live cattle and frozen carcasses of beef cannot be shipped into this country from the Argentine because of the hoof-and-mouth disease, might not our citizens as well as our Navy boys have some suspicion about the canned beef from the Argentine. The whole thing does not make sense to me. The American people will generally believe that cattle fed on bluegrass, alfalfa, clover, timothy, soybeans, corn, prairie grass, and other fine grasses in this country with the pure water found everywhere here, the fine climate and sunshine, will produce as good beef in Kentucky, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Ohio, Illinois, Colorado, Wyoming, Michigan, Minnesota, South Dakota, and other States, as could be produced in the Argentine of South America on their wild grasses with the prevalence of the hoof-and-mouth disease.

We want our boys in the Army and Navy to have as good food as possible. Our boys in the Navy grew up to be robust, vigorous men eating American beef. I wonder if President Roosevelt, the Commander in Chief of the Navy, eats American canned beef or beef from the Argentine. We, too, want him to have as good beef as can be found, and when he makes his trip in a few days through the great cattle-raising States that I have spoken of, I wonder if he, as the Commander in Chief of the Navy, will have a supply of the Argentine canned beef or will he be served with American beef? Those who are responsible for the care of the President, the Commander in Chief of the Navy, should see to it that he has that beef "that is infinitely superior in quality to the American product."

Let us hope that the President will not say that the wheat of the Argentine, the Long Staple cotton of Brazil, the rice of China and Japan, the fruits of other nations, the shoes, clothing, and other supplies necessary for our Navy and Army are "infinitely superior in quality to the American product."

I am informed that the Army boys now eat and have through the years eaten American canned beef. They have done as much fighting in the last 40 years as the Navy and have made a very wonderful record. There is no navy or army superior to our own. Both branches of the service have made glorious records eating American beef, and can we believe their record will be any less brilliant if they eat the products of the American farm intead of the Argentine?

BLACK EYE FOR UNITED STATES—BOOST FOR ARGENTINA

What a black eye the President gave to the cattle industry and the producers of American canned beef. How many citizens will refuse now to buy the American products? How can our producers of these products sell them in foreign countries when our President says it is unfit for our own American Navy boys? And what a tremendous boost this is to the Argentine canned beef notwithstanding the hoof-and-mouth disease. For many years it will mean millions of dollars' worth of business annually for the Argentine. It will take many, many years to live down this unfavorable publicity that the President's statement has given. We ought to give preference to American producers of canned beef, or our Government should rescind the order excluding from this country Argentine cattle and Argentine beef carcasses.

With the reciprocal-trade agreements with the South American countries and our financing of these countries, it is little wonder that we are accumulating in this country tremendous surpluses of cotton, wheat, corn, meats, and other products and must let our own productive lands lie idle and force the workers of our productive lands on relief rolls, cut down the price of American products, and reduce the income of American farmers.

ARGENTINE CANNED BEEF CHEAPER

It must be conceded that any product produced in Latin America, China, Japan, India and many other countries can be sold cheaper than when produced on American farms or in our factories, mills, or shops. Our wages are higher, our workweek shorter, our standards of living higher.

In many of the Latin American countries common laborers are hired for as little as 10 cents a day, and their processing plants are not subject to the Walsh-Healey Act, Wage and Hour Act, child-labor laws, and other such measures that must be taken into consideration by American producers of canned beef and other products. If it is a matter of buying cheaper, why not buy rice from China and Japan, and chinaware and crockery from Japan, the textiles, shoes, and clothing, and a hundred other important articles used in the Navy and other branches of our Government produced in countries with long hours, sweatshop wages and conditions, for the Navy, Army, and other agencies of the Government? The United States cannot have high wages, short workweek, and other desirable conditions for labor and compete with Latin American countries—China, Japan, India, and many other nations—that could furnish our supplies. The American cattle producers and farmers must pay good wages and the things they buy they must pay high prices made necessary because of good wages, short hours, and proper working conditions.

The President points out that we would get a few cents duty on each pound of canned beef from the Argentine. One-fourth of the average income of the American people goes for taxes. If a pound of canned beef is sold for 23 cents, the producer of that beef would pay at least 6 cents in district, city, county, State, and Federal taxes. And if we get our beef from foreign countries, it will not be produced here and these taxes cannot be paid, and more important than this, we will have no use for our lands and no jobs for our people. If the United States, the greatest agricultural country in the world, cannot produce canned beef, steak, roast, pork, suitable for the fighting men of the Army and Navy of this country, we ought to go out of business.

An amendment was written into the Navy appropriation bill in the House for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1939, that will make it impossible for the President or any other official to ignore the "Buy American" Act of Congress and buy supplies from foreign producers instead of American producers. It is most gratifying, indeed, that the Senate committee has approved that amendment.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. Will the gentleman spend about 2 hours telling us about the canned beef used during the Spanish-American War, which was furnished the American soldiers on which to fight in that war?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; that was 40 years ago, or before the Pure Food Act, and they ought to have been hanged for doing it. Does that suit the gentleman? Does my friend plead what happened 40 years ago in justification of the President's act?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. During the World War we veterans never heard of corned beef; we ate "monkey meat."

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. You cannot use words too strong for me to denounce anybody who provides for the fighters of this country any meat or other food that will cause illness or is not the proper food. There is no claim the American beef was diseased or unfit for use. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. To revise and extend my remarks; and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Thirty-two Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 6392, and finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called, when 268 Members responded to their names, disclosing that a quorum is present, and he handed in the names of the absentees for printing in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the Committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

ARE WE TO HAVE A GOVERNMENT BY LAW UNDER THE CONSTITUTION, OR SUBMIT, THROUGH FEAR OR THREAT OF VIOLENCE, TO A GOVERNMENT BY FORCE IMPOSED BY JOHN L. LEWIS?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, that is a question which may be answered within the next few days in the State of Kentucky. There John L. Lewis has decreed that no man shall work in the soft-coal mines unless he becomes a member of the United Mine Workers of America.

Governor Chandler, apparently believing it to be his duty to uphold our constitutional form of government, has called out the National Guard to protect men who have refused to join the United Mine Workers and who desire to work in the mines of Kentucky.

Lewis has declared that if the mine operators are wise, they will keep their mines closed. His United Mine Workers are prepared to prevent, by force, the opening of those mines; to deny to the citizens of Kentucky the right to work, to earn a livelihood for themselves and their families.

Here we have, on the one side, the armed National Guard, whose duty it is to see to it that those citizens who want to exercise their constitutional rights are permitted so to do.

Here we have opposed to these forces of law and order thousands of miners or sympathizers, obedient to the will of Lewis, prepared to back up Lewis' decree that the mines shall not open; that none shall work in them until they submit to Lewis' will.

It is well, then, that we consider the background, the history, of this man Lewis.

It was on the 19th day of June 1922, almost 17 years ago, that John L. Lewis, in answer to a telegram from the president of the local United Mine Workers Union at Herrin, Ill., inquiring as to the status of men belonging to the Steam Shovel Men's Union, who were digging coal in strip mines, sent an answer containing this paragraph:

> Representatives of our organization are justified in treating this crowd as an outlaw organization and in viewing its members in the the same light as they do any other common strikebreaker.

The following day men at Herrin, after arming themselves with rifles, shotguns, pitchforks, butcher knives, and clubs, forced the unarmed surrender of 47 men who had been digging coal. Of these men who so surrendered, one, McDowell, mine superintendent, was a cripple. He did not walk as fast as the mob wished. He was beaten until he was unconscious; revived, marched again, and then was shot to death.

Farther down the road some of these unarmed men were lined up against a wire fence, ordered to climb the fence and run. Thirteen were shot to death as they climbed the fence. Another died shortly thereafter. Four more died of wounds on reaching the shelter of the woods. Eight who escaped for the moment were caught. Two were hanged to trees and shot. Six were tied together on one rope and dragged behind a motorcar, and, on arrival at Herrin, taken to a cemetery and shot. The throats of three were cut.

The press of the day published the statement that, on the evening of that day, John L. Lewis' telegram to the president of the local union was still posted where the union miners could see it; that in a barber shop there was another notice, which read.

> Twenty-five scabs are dead, nine are in the hospital, and the mine is closed. The striking miners' prayer was answered.

In June of 1922 the telegram of Lewis that—

> Representatives of our organizations are justified in treating this crowd as an outlaw organization and in viewing its members in the same light as they do any other common strikebreaker—was answered by the shooting, by the hanging, by the throat cutting of the workers by the strikers.

Today what is it that John L. Lewis expects the striking miners in Kentucky to do? Does he expect that, in answer to his statement that the mines shall not open, that no one shall dig coal until he joins his United Mine Workers; that those striking miners at Harlan, Ky., shall shoot, hang, or cut the throats of the men—citizens of Kentucky—who desire to exercise their constitutional right to work in the mines of that county?

Does he expect, does he intend, that the striking members of his organization are to shoot down the National Guard of the State of Kentucky, who have been called out under the law of the land to protect the citizens of the State and of these United States?

Does he expect that the President of the United States, who has been placed in the position of supporting him and his organization, will approve of his conduct? Can he and his followers make the people of this country believe that our President will forget his duty—will remain silent if Lewis brings bloodshed, wholesale killings, into the county of Harlan, in the State of Kentucky?

Because Lewis and the C. I. O. and the Communists in it were backed up by Governor Murphy and the National Guard of that State in their unlawful conduct, their violence, and their beatings in the sit-down strikes carried on in Michigan, does Lewis now believe that he can go one step further and by his conduct bring about mass killings and go uncondemned by public opinion, unpunished by the law of the land?

Why talk about dictators abroad when here in this land of ours a man like Lewis, a private citizen, can issue decrees depriving citizens not only of their civil liberties but of the right to work for the necessities of life?

Lewis has forgotten the history of our forefathers. It may be well to call his attention to a few historic facts, so that, reading, he may realize once and for all that while our people are patient and long suffering, in the end no one can deprive them of their liberty.

It was on the 15th day of June, in the year 1215, at Runnymede, King John, for the salvation of his soul and the souls of his ancestors and heirs, by the Magna Carta did grant and proclaim, for himself and his heirs, among other things, that the freemen of his kingdom should thereafter have certain liberties, and that to none would he deny or delay right or justice.

Early in the history of this country, patriot James Otis it was who announced the truth that "taxation without representation is tyranny," a principle to which heretofore all true Americans have given allegiance.

On the 4th day of July 1776 our forefathers, in their wisdom, declared, among other things, that it was self-evident—

That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

To establish the principles so declared our forefathers for 8 long years, at the cost of untold suffering and privation, fought the Revolutionary War.

To make secure those rights the then States of the Union did adopt a constitution which, among other things, provides that—

The Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

To maintain some of the rights so defined and the freedom of the seas our forefathers fought and won the War of 1812.

This Government of ours, to establish the principle that every man should be free, for 4 long years carried on the Civil War.

This Government, to aid in bringing to other peoples the freedom and the liberty which we prize so highly, fought the Spanish-American War, and at immeasurable cost in treasure and suffering took part in the World War.

John L. Lewis, repudiating the doctrine announced by James Otis that "taxation without representation is tyranny," now seeks to establish the doctrine that he, Lewis, may impose and collect, without the worker's consent, fees and dues from every man in America who desires to work.

Such doctrine, so announced by the said John L. Lewis, if established and maintained, would deprive American citizens of the inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, to freedom of speech and of the press, and of life, liberty, and property without due process of law, and of the right to work and thus of the right to maintain himself and his family.

The New York Times, in its issue of Sunday, May 14, 1939, carried the statement that John L. Lewis, commenting on the action of the operators of certain mines who refused to sign an agreement under which no man could dig coal in the mines operated by them until he had joined the United Mine Workers of America, said:

I want to issue a word of warning to the associations of the six districts that refuse to sign the new agreement and to say to them that, until they make up their minds to accept this agreement, sound public policy requires that they keep those mines closed.

That newspaper carried the further statement attributed to Lewis that—

Soldiers in Harlan County will not operate the mines or produce coal there or elsewhere. The time has gone by in the United States of America when the coal operators of the country can be shot back into the mine.

The Washington News of May 16, 1939, carried the statement that Mr. Lewis said:

Soldiers and guns will not mine coal in the United States. The time has past when you can shoot men back into the mines.

Governor Chandler, of Kentucky, according to the press, has called out State troops and has made the announcement that—

No man can tell our people to work or not to work and no one can come into this State and cause trouble.

John L. Lewis, according to the press, has demanded a Federal investigation of the use of National Guard men in the Harlan County mine feud.

John L. Lewis has boldly proclaimed that here in this land, which we thought to be free, man may and will be deprived of the God-given and man-acknowledged right to, by the toil of his hands and in the sweat of his brow, work for the necessities of life, and thus has declared himself to be seeking the role of a tyrant, seeking to possess and exercise the powers claimed and, prior to the Magna Carta, exercised by King John of England.

It is evident that if Governor Chandler insists that the citizens of Kentucky be free to exercise the rights guaranteed them by the Federal Constitution, and if John L. Lewis persists in his determination that no man shall work in the mines of Kentucky until he has joined the United Mine Workers, there will be riots and bloodshed.

The future of our people and our Nation depends upon the preservation of the freedom and the liberties guaranteed to us by the Federal Constitution.

The issue as to whether the rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution of our Nation and heretofore preserved to us by the courage and the patriotism of our forefathers shall be exercised by our citizens and passed on undiminished to our children, or whether we shall now surrender those rights and submit to the dictation of John L. Lewis or some organization, is squarely presented.

The question now before this country is this: Are we to be governed by law; to exercise the rights guaranteed to us under our State and Federal Constitutions and defined in the Federal and State statutes, or are we to submit to the demands of John L. Lewis?

Stated in a different way, the question is this: Who is the head of this Nation? Is it Franklin Delano Roosevelt or is it John L. Lewis?

The Constitution guarantees to every man the right to work. The President is charged with the enforcement of the law, which protects that right. John L. Lewis says that no man shall work until he has complied with the conditions laid down by him.

Is the President, acting within and under the Constitution and the laws of the land, supreme; or is John L. Lewis the man who from this day on will tell us what we may or may not do?

To aid in answering this question, a resolution has been introduced by me, calling for an investigation by Congress of Lewis, the organizations which he controls, and their activities. Your attention is directed to it. That resolution is as follows:

Whereas John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and head of the C. I. O., has announced in substance that no man shall be permitted to dig coal in the soft-coal mines until he has joined the United Mine Workers of America, and it is apparent that he intends to enforce that demand by force if necessary; and

Whereas the Governor of Kentucky, in which State some of these mines are located, has declared that "No man can tell our people to work or not to work and no one can come into this State and cause trouble," and, for the purpose of making good that announcement, has called out State troops; and

Whereas John L. Lewis has demanded a Federal investigation of the use of the national guardsmen in the Harlan County mine feud; and

Whereas it is apparent that violence and bloodshed will occur if the Governor of Kentucky stands by his declaration to see to it that the citizens of Kentucky are permitted to exercise the rights guaranteed them by the Federal Constitution; and

Whereas the issue as to whether the rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution of our Nation and heretofore preserved to us by the courage and the patriotism of our forefathers shall be exercised by our citizens and passed on undiminished to our children, or whether we shall now surrender those rights and submit to the dictation of John L. Lewis or some organization is squarely presented: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House be, and he hereby is, required to appoint a committee consisting of five members of the House, who shall inquire into, determine, and report to the House:

(1) On what pretense John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers of America assume to declare that no man shall work in the coal mines until he has joined the United Mine Workers of America; and by what means and in what manner he or it intends to enforce that declaration.

(2) What sums have been collected and in what manner such sums have been expended by John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers of America or any individual or organization affiliated with or acting in conjunction with them, or either of them, for the purpose of influencing or compelling workers to join or submit to the demands of the said John L. Lewis, the United Mine Workers of America, or any organization connected with or acting in conjunction with them.

(3) Whether the said John L. Lewis or those acting in conjunction with him intend to prevent, by mass picketing or by the use of force, citizens of Kentucky or of any other place, who desire to work, from going about their daily tasks.

(4) Whether John L. Lewis has received any assurance from any Government official that, if members of the United Mine Workers of America attempt, by force, to prevent American citizens from going about their daily tasks in the mining of coal and if such attempts are opposed by State troops, the armed forces of the United States will be used to assist the said Lewis or strikers who may be engaged in such attempt in the furtherance of their plans.

That said committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed or adjourned; to hold such hearings; to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpena shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives or the chairman of said committee, and shall be served by any person designated by them or either of them. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof wilfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102, chapter 7, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, 1878.

That, upon the completion of such investigation, said committee report within a reasonable time to this House the result of its investigation, with a recommendation as to how and in what manner the rights guaranteed to the citizens of this country by the Federal Constitution may be upheld and maintained.

Resolved further, That in the event the committee transmits its report to the Speaker at a time when the House is not in session, as it is hereby given authority to do, a record of such transmittal shall be entered in the proceedings of the Journal and CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the House on the opening day of the next session of Congress, and shall be numbered and printed as a report of such Congress.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I have two matters which I wish to discuss with the Members this afternoon, matters which I consider to be very important, which have a very definite bearing on the lives, the liberty, and the happiness of the people of this Nation. The first matter I want to discuss is a matter of some local importance, as well as national, having to do, as it does, with the welfare and activities of the State prisons of many of the States of the Union. In the bill which we were to consider on Monday last, H. R. 5435, tucked away in the last page of the bill, there is a section, section 20, entitled "Prohibition Against Interstate Transportation of Convict-Made Goods." Many of you have, as I have, in your State a prison wherein a factory or industry of one kind or another is carried on. In our State prison in Minnesota we have millions of dollars invested in a factory which has been operating upward of a quarter of a century, in which is manufactured all kinds of farm machinery and equipment and binder twine. If this section 20 of H. R. 5435 is allowed to stay in, and the bill is brought back before the House and passed, it will virtually put our factory out of business, and I know it will have a similar effect on the factories in the prisons in many other States. For that reason I call this matter to your attention. I do not want to discuss it at length this afternoon, but I shall be prepared to do that if the proponents of this bill—H. R. 5435—attempt to bring it into the House again without taking out this section. One might think on the face of the matter that there is some justification for prohibiting prison factories and for prohibiting prison-made goods from being transported in interstate commerce. As a matter of fact, only about one-twentieth of 1 percent of all goods manufactured in the entire Nation are manufactured with convict labor or in prison factories.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that there are three States in this Nation that are making prison binder twine, and that today the United States is the only country in the world that does not have a tariff on imported binder twine from other countries, and that the amount made in the prisons of this country has decreased about 50 percent in the past 10 years?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am familiar with the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan and I thank him for the observation. I started to say that on the face of it, it might seem that this is something which would interfere to a large degree with organized labor, or with farm machinery factory labor throughout this country and I mention the fact that only one-twentieth of 1 percent of the total industrial production in the country is produced in prison factories, but one must consider the fact that whether in prison or not the men will have to live and their families must live, and they would be entitled to work if out of prison; so why should we say that because they have been arrested, convicted, and incarcerated in prison, they should be taken out of the usual activities of life? Are they not still entitled to live and to work?

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. What organization or groups of people are behind this proposed bill or amendment about which the gentleman is speaking?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have before me House Document 702, and I refer the Members of the House to this interesting document. It contains hearings before the Federal Trade Commission and is entitled "The Report of the Agricultural Implement and Machinery Industry; Concentration and Competitive Methods of the Farm Machinery Trust." This book contains some 1,200 pages and leads me to believe that behind this section 20 is the everlasting, continual movement on the part of that Farm Machinery Trust of the East to eliminate this little competition, so that they can control prices on farm machinery and equipment completely. There are some interesting items exactly pointing to this conclusion in this booklet. When you consider the fact that prices on farm machinery and equipment at this time average 158 percent higher than they were before the World War and that farm crop prices are about 5 percent below pre-war levels you can get some idea of what it means to the farmers of this country who contend with a combine, trust, or monopoly of that sort without any competition or restraints such as we are able to apply in the Northwest States and which I hope some of the other States are able to apply because of this factory which we have been operating in the State prison at Stillwater. In fact, prices right now on many farm implements are over 200 percent higher than in 1913–14. The cost of harrows, rakes, hay loaders, and cultivators are all over 200 percent higher than in 1914.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. This amendment, in effect, would prohibit the industry in the Stillwater Prison almost entirely, would it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It would. Not only that, but to the farmers throughout the country who have purchased implements manufactured in these prison factories, it would prohibit their buying parts or supplies or providing themselves with repairs for those implements which they already have on their farms, in case they need to repair them.

I want to read a short statement regarding some of the labor aspects of this prison factory situation, which is on a card that was given to me sometime ago:

PRISON COMPETITION INTERFERES WITH FREE LABOR LESS THAN ONE-TWENTIETH OF 1 PERCENT

Criminologists agree prisoners should work and not be exposed to the deteriorating influence of idleness.

Employment in prisons replaces antiquated methods and instruments of torture with humanitarian methods devoted to detention and education, equipping men for useful self-supporting lives when released.

In Stillwater 1,400 inmates have taken 1,400 men from the ranks of free labor, creating 1,400 vacancies for others. In addition, has created 300 new jobs for free labor in the institution operation and management.

Employment of prisoners in Minnesota makes our prison self-supporting.

Saved the people of Minnesota millions in taxes.

Saved the purchasers of products millions of dollars.

Prisoners paid $150,000 yearly in wages, mostly sent to their families. This takes burden off others.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. How many thousand dollars did the gentleman say the prisoners had received in that institution?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In our State we have paid them $150,000 a year in wages.

Mr. DUNN. What would that average?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Per prisoner?

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We had 1,419 in Stillwater Prison when I visited there in December.

Mr. DUNN. A great deal of this money goes to maintain their families, as the gentleman says. Of course, I am a member of the Committee on Labor and probably had something to do with the bill. Can the gentleman tell the House what these men would receive on the average per week?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have not had an opportunity to figure that out. I have the figures here in the annual report for Stillwater Prison, and, as I recall, it averages about 67 cents a day cash, plus their keep.

Mr. DUNN. Does not the gentleman think that if in some way we could increase the salaries of these unfortunate prisoners there would not be so much objection to this part of the law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I recall, our average cost for the support of prisoners, including the money they get, averages between $3 and $4 a day in Minnesota. I think that compares favorably with the average annual wage of the people that this particular industrial activity involves.

Mr. DUNN. Does not the gentleman believe the reason why various labor organizations are in favor of this part of the bill is because of the cheap labor in these prisons?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think that is a lot of poppycock. I think labor is being used as a cat's-paw by the Farm Machinery Trust. I think what we want to do is to keep our prison costs down as much as we can. When you raise costs you increase taxes. These increased taxes thus loading onto the individual citizen outside the prison a great deal more tax burden for the operation of our State institutions, which eventually comes out of the pocket of the laboring man.

Mr. DUNN. I do not know, of course, just exactly the situation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman is speaking to the resolution recently reported by the Committee on Labor proposing certain so-called amendments to the existing wage-hour law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. COX. That is the bill which I understand the Committee on Labor has sought to withdraw from the House in order to give further consideration to the question, it not having been made clear, however, that there was any intention on the part of the committee to report anything whatever.

Is the gentleman informed that this committee, the Committee on Labor, since meeting with defeat in its effort to withdraw the bill to which he addresses himself, has reported another bill; and if so, is the gentleman able to inform the House as to the intent of the committee in the manner of securing consideration, whether they will ask for a suspension of the rules and thereby defeat the right of amendment, or whether they will ask for a rule providing full consideration, full debate, and full freedom on the part of the membership of this House to amend?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am trying to check on that matter, because of my interest in this section 20 and other sections of the bill. As near as I am able to understand the matter, as it stands at present, is in the hands of the Rules Committee and will stay there until they bring in a rule; otherwise nothing else can be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. I understand. It is my information that as things now stand there are two bills now in the House offered by the Committee on Labor—the bill to which the gentleman addresses himself and another bill which, I understand, was introduced today. The committee abandoned its expressed intention of asking for a suspension in order to test the judgment of the House on the bill to which he is speaking.

Let me ask the gentleman if he is prepared, or if he knows of any Member of the House who is prepared, to make application to the Committee on Rules for a rule providing for consideration of the bill which he now has before him?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; and I think no one will do that. There are some features of that amendment which was proposed here Monday which are meritorious—for instance, the one in connection with rural telephone companies.

Mr. COX. But was the gentleman prepared to have approved the procedure adopted by the committee, that is threatened to be adopted by the committee, asking for a suspension of the rules?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I certainly was not.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Just to keep the RECORD straight, may I say to my colleague from Georgia that, according to my way of reading the RECORD, the chairman of the Committee on Labor in asking for the return of the bill amending the Fair Labor Standards Act stated that it was her purpose to take it back to the committee for revision and for report back to the House.

Insofar as the new bill is concerned, the only information I have about it is that the chairman of the committee, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] informed the committee this morning that she would introduce during the day a new bill containing all of the amendments in the present pending bill, with the exception of the agricultural amendments, and that the bill would be brought to the attention of the Committee on Labor next week for its consideration.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for the purpose of my asking my colleague a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would like to proceed myself, but I yield briefly.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman is in a position to speak for the committee and therefore able to inform the House as to whether there will be another effort to secure suspension of the rules to pass the bill to which he has just referred in the event his committee reports it favorably?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Insofar as I am concerned—I can speak for myself only, but I give it as my mature judgment the only way we can pass these meritorious amendments and have them become law is under a suspension of the rules. In that, of course, I know my colleague, for whom I have the highest regard, disagrees; but I do not agree with his judgment. I think the only way we can get these meritorious amendments passed, amendments in which so many Members are interested, is to do it under a suspension of the rules and not attempt to throw this law wide open to emasculating amendments which certainly would be offered.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman unwilling to trust this House with the right to impress its views upon the proposal by offering amendments which are expressive of their best judgment?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am not unwilling to trust this House about anything, but I believe in being practical; and I want to see passed some modified amendments, but not in the way my colleague would indicate.

Mr. COX. Under suspension of the rules no amendment could be offered by any Member of the House.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I said at the outset there were two matters I wanted to discuss at this time. I am going to leave this matter of prisons now for your digestion, but I know it is a thing that most of you are vitally interested in because of the fact that you all have State prisons. This brings me to the second thought I want to present this afternoon.

Throughout my short life I have interested myself in a number of our great national problems, among them the problem of crime. In the bill now under consideration, H. R. 6392, we appropriate under the Department of Justice for the Federal Bureau of Investigation which is doing a very fine, a very wonderful, and meritorious work throughout the entire land. You will note if you examine the bill and the committee's report that each of the items covered calls for an increased appropriation over last year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We are forced to make these increased appropriations mainly because of the indifference and inattention not only on the part of the general public to this problem of crime, but because of the indifference of those in positions of leadership in this Nation, including we, ourselves, the ones who are asked to make this appropriation for the Department of Justice. We hear not a single word about this great problem of crime, about any cure for it, or anything which will serve to lessen its demands upon the Treasury. For this reason I am constrained to bring before you a few serious thoughts regarding this subject this afternoon. It is our problem. It is the problem of every good citizen of this land. It is not only a problem of citizenship, it is also our religious duty if we call ourselves a Christian Nation as is clearly and unmistakably pointed out by Christ himself in the thirty-ninth and fortieth verses of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew.

So let us make a start in studying this problem. In the first place I ask you if you know how many of the men and women arrested during the past year, the past 2 years, or any particular period of time, had been previously arrested and convicted and served time in prison?

Do any of you know that figure? I have it in the form of a report from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, volume 8, No. 4, in which I find the following paragraph:

> There was a total of 229,583 persons arrested during 1937 concerning whom there was information on file dealing with prior criminal activities, and the record showed that 149,091 had been convicted previously of one or more crimes. This number is 64.9 percent of the 229,583 records containing data concerning prior criminal activities.

Now, listen to this:

> In more than one-half of the cases the previous convictions were based on major violations as indicated by the following figures.

There is a total of 78,610 convicted of such crimes as criminal homicide, robbery, assault, burglary, larceny, arson, forgery and counterfeiting, rape, narcotic drug laws, carrying weapons, and driving while intoxicated.

Mr. Chairman, is that not an indictment of our method of handling criminals when we find nearly 65 percent of those arrested have been previously arrested, convicted, and have served time and then were let out onto the public again? In other words, this leaves us about 35 percent of those arrested who may be termed beginners or first offenders.

Thus this problem divides itself into two sections, as I see it; first, to aid that group of 35 percent in avoiding crime and to solve this eternal problem of crime by some constructive method as far as the 65-percent group is concerned, who because of their having served time we know are unfortunate and need our special help and care lest they fall again. As it is now, we turn them out into the country in competition with 11,000,000, or whatever the figure is, unemployed.

We spank them, in other words, and we say to them: "Now you behave. You have had your punishment. You go straight from now on," expecting them, in the face of the competition which exists today, to go out, get a job and make an honest living. It seems to me that is the height of absurdity. And the net results are indicated by the above figures.

LET US HAVE CRIME CURING

What are we doing about this situation. We know the problem. Now let us go to work. First of all it seems to me that we need to coin a new phrase to fit this problem. I would say we need a new activity in this country to be known as crime curing. Every year our crime grows larger and more expensive. Every year we need to build larger prisons, larger jails, and larger courts, police departments, and other crime catching and punishing machinery.

Is it not apparent that we are thinking too much about crime catching and crime punishing instead of something about crime curing? It is evident from the growth of crime that our present methods are not curing crime.

To put the matter in another way, are not we leaving this problem entirely too much to our police, our courts, and our prison officials, who are in general doing a very fine job of catching and punishing criminals, which is their job, but nothing much about curing crime, judging from its continuous and unabated growth. Is not the problem ours rather than theirs and is not that the big reason why we have the situation which exists today because of our neglect and indifference in the matter?

LET US THINK THIS THING THROUGH TOGETHER

The major objective of American democracy is the protection of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness for its peoples. Any force which threatens the inalienable and absolute rights guaranteed to the American citizenry constitutes an enemy in our midst. For several years I have been concerned with the menace of lawlessness which threatens every home in this Nation. Crime we have had since the dawn of time—at least since the larceny of the forbidden fruit in the Garden of Eden. It would be utopian to expect that crime can be completely eradicated from our social order. However, we can aim at the irreducible minimum.

Few topics have received so much forensic attention as crime. And as a result, the crime problem all too often has been the object of considerable discussion by good-hearted but theoretical individuals whose practical knowledge of crime and its problems has been almost nil. Naturally smoke screens of theory have camouflaged many of the most vital factors in crime causation and treatment. And as we pass from the theoretical to the practical aspects of the crime problem, I can point to the seriousness of the problem best in the words of Director J. Edgar Hoover, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who is the foremost authority in the Nation on crime. In discussing the menace of lawlessness, Director Hoover said:

> The army of criminals numbers at the present time over 4,600,000 persons. This number of individuals banded together for any definite purpose might well be considered to constitute a very serious challenge. Four million six hundred thousand individuals constitute an army greater than any that overran Europe and Asia in ancient times. Well-organized and armed, it casts an ominous shadow over the peace of the world and threatens our own individual security and safety, and the bearing it has on the perpetuation of democracy itself.

Are these figures fully understood? Would these facts be more realistic if I pointed out that last year in this country a serious crime was committed every 22 seconds; that 3,927 serious crimes were committed every day; that nearly 1,500,000 serious crimes, such as murder, manslaughter, rape, robbery, burglary, and aggravated assault, were committed during the year; that 33 murders were committed every day; that one burglary was committed every 1¾ minutes; that one robbery was committed every 9 minutes; and that one larceny was committed every 38 seconds?

It is, of course, difficult to estimate correctly the annual cost of crime, yet it is generally agreed that crime costs the Nation a minimum of approximately $15,000,000,000 annually. And even in these days of mass production and big business, it must be recognized that a $15,000,000,000 enterprise is something to be reckoned with, particularly since this constitutes a levy of about $120 for every man and woman in the Nation each year. In fact, the cost of crime is 400 percent more than the national cost of education, which is $3,000,000,000. With so much consideration being given to tax burdens, it might be well to observe in passing that the cost of crime is 25 percent greater than our total annual tax bill of approximately $12,000,000,000. There is no way whereby we can estimate the cost of crime to the Nation in terms of human values. Over 1,000,000 persons annually pass through the county jails of America. The prison population in any State constitutes a community in itself.

My own State of Minnesota has recognized the crime problem in recent years, particularly after it became necessary to call upon the Federal Government to clean up marauding gangs of desperadoes who saw in the Twin Cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis green pastures and lucrative fields beckoning to their predatory instincts. And the State of Minnesota acknowledges with gratitude the splendid work of J. Edgar Hoover and his G-men in exterminating the Barker-Karpis gang, John Dillinger, "Baby Face" Nelson, and scores of other unwanted guests.

Today Minnesota does not have the best record in the country, but neither does it have the highest crime rates. As a matter of fact, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation's tabulation of crime statistics, only 3 other States have lower murder rates, only 14 have lower robbery rates, only 7 have lower assault rates, only 9 have fewer burglaries per 100,000 inhabitants, only 19 have lower larceny rates; although 31 other States have lower rates of auto theft.

In comparing crime rates in Minnesota with crime rates per 100,000 inhabitants throughout the United States, it is noted that with the exception of larceny and auto theft, Minnesota has lower rates than the general average:

Offense	Offenses per 100,000 inhabitants
	In Minnesota	In the United States
Murder, nonnegligent manslaughter	1.1	6.0
Robbery	42.3	76.6
Aggravated assault	9.5	50.6
Burglary	251.2	294.4
Larceny	754.7	725.5
Auto theft	210.3	188.1

There are three phases to the crime problem which are particularly appealing to me and which should be emphasized in every State and community in the Nation. First of all, it is obvious that good law enforcement is an absolute necessity, and we are developing that angle progressively. As Director Hoover has so aptly said, "Sure detection, swift apprehension, and the certainty of punishment are the time-proven deterrents to crime." At least this has been proven by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in dealing with kidnapers and bank robbers. Out of the 148 kidnaping cases reported to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, 146 have been completely solved, and bank robbery has declined over 75 percent since Congress enacted the Federal Bank Robbery Act in 1934.

I feel qualified to speak of kidnaping, since my State has been the scene of much activity. Only a little over a year ago John Henry Seadlund was brought to the northern woods of Minnesota after the G-men had chased him from coast to coast and over halfway back across the continent. This time Seadlund was in custody for the kidnaping of Charles S. Ross, of Chicago. He had used Minnesota as a hide-out, but only once. He will kidnap and kill no more. Justice has taken its course.

The first line of public defense is our American police, whose development in recent years has been unparalleled. But our peacetime army of law enforcement needs our assistance just as does the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. And at this point I want to commend American law enforcement for its vision in taking more and more an active part in crime prevention.

Here is the second phase of the crime problem, which really deserves not only the best thinking in the Nation but the most concerted action of every father and mother in the Nation. The facts are stark and revealing. The crime problem is a youth problem. Of the 554,376 case histories studied by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, as reflected in its publication entitled "Uniform Crime Reports" (vol. 9, No. 4, p. 159), 104,425 of the individuals arrested were less than 21 years of age, 94,909 were between 21 and 24; or 199,334 of the individuals arrested in 1938 were less than 25 years of age. Add to this the 94,815 individuals arrested between the ages of 25 and 29 and you have 294,149 persons under 30 years of age. In other words, 53 percent of the persons arrested in 1938 were under 30 years of age, 35.9 percent were under 25 years of age, while 18.8 percent had not reached the age of voting. Yet strangely these figures are encouraging, because from 1932 to the middle of 1935 more persons 19 years of age were arrested than in any other age group. Slowly the age has been rising, until in 1938 the largest number of persons arrested were 21 years of age.

The most appalling fact shown in these figures, however, is that while only 18.8 percent of the persons arrested were under 21, yet this group accounted for 12 percent of the murderers arrested, 28 percent of the robbers, 43 percent of the burglars, 31 percent of the larceners, and 52 percent of the car thieves arrested.

According to the most recent figures of the Bureau of the Census, a total of 63,552 persons were sentenced by the courts to serve penitentiary terms during 1937. Of this number 12,188 were under 21 years of age and 12,221 were between 21 and 24, while 11,515 were between 25 and 29. In other words over 56 percent of the persons committed to prison were under 30 years of age.

And in passing, let me ask this question, Could it be that the Civilian Conservation Corps, by taking boys from poor environments in hundreds of thousands of cases, has been responsible for raising the largest group of persons arrested from 19 to 21 years of age? I do not think it at all unreasonable to conclude that it has been a major factor. Not only that but there is also the health angle as indicated by the following editorial taken from one of our daily papers:

HEALTH CONSERVATION IN C. C. C.

A telling commentary on what the C. C. C. has done in the field of health "conservation" is to be found in figures showing that the death rate for pulmonary tuberculosis among C. C. C. boys is only 0.06 per 1,000 boys.

That is all the more impressive when you consider that the death rate from that disease is six times higher for the general male population in the 15 to 29 age group.

Work in conserving resources, rehabilitating forests and parks, is usually cited as the C. C. C.'s primary accomplishment. Maybe it is—it's certainly important enough—but the health and muscle gained by C. C. C. members, many of whom come from urban slum areas, are a tremendously beneficial byproduct.

Ask any experienced law-enforcement officer why youth commits crime and he will tell you that it is not solely because of poverty or out of sheer antisocial tendencies. He will tell you that youth commits crime because of several reasons, such as defective home conditions, bad companions, abnormal physical conditions, deficient early development, unsatisfied interests, and extreme educational defects. As Director Hoover has observed, "youth commits crime because some adult has committed a greater crime. Youth commits crime because of deep-laid social faults that must be corrected." One feature of this problem is referred to in the following news item taken from the Minneapolis Journal, as follows:

INSTRUCTION IN SEX URGED FOR SCHOOLS

NEW YORK, April 21.—Advocating sex instruction in public schools, Ellsworth B. Buck, New York City educator, laid to parents today the responsibility for increase in social disease, and the number of illegitimate babies born to high-school-age girls, he said, was shown in a national survey.

Buck said a committee would be appointed to study possibility of including sex instruction in high-school courses here.

"An appalling picture of ignorance" was his description of the survey showing that about 40 children in every 1,000 in the Nation are born out of wedlock, almost half of them to girls between the ages of 15 and 19 years.

The present conditions, Buck said, have arisen "precisely because parents refuse or are unequipped" to undertake proper sex instruction of children.

I have already referred to John Henry Seadlund, the kidnaper and murderer of Mr. Charles S. Ross, and the killer of his own associate, James Atwood Gray. According to the press reports, Seadlund openly admitted he committed crime because of the excitement it gave him. And that is not unusual. Sixteen-year-old George Tindell, of Holden, Mo., after seeing a hair-raising movie with his friend, went on a 3-day orgy during which he stole four cars, committed four robberies, and kidnaped three persons. Had George spent a little more of his time playing football or some other sport, his desires for new thrills and excitement no doubt would have been satisfied and he would not have been sent to prison for 15 years.

Crime prevention more and more demands our attention. In my youth there were chores to do—wood to be chopped, livestock and poultry to be cared for, and odd jobs to be done. Somehow it seems that youth has more leisure time today and unless his leisure time is spent in a creative manner amidst clean, wholesome surroundings, something is bound to happen once his sense of moral responsibility weakens. The answer lies in increased recreational facilities, as well as in appropriate discharge of parental responsibilities. Remember, as I have pointed out, crime costs this Nation nearly $120 a person per year. Yet the per capita cost for recreational services in 94 cities ranges from 2 cents to $2.83 per year. We pay billions to the forces of lawlessness, yet scarcely spend millions for recreation and other activities which will give youth an outlet for his overabundant energy. What fools we mortals be. Why, in one great metropolitan city—from volume 3 Survey of Recreation in Chicago, by Northwestern University—vice, it is said, and terrible as it is, annually nets more than is paid out for all kinds of recreation—commercial and private. The average youth in school has between 4 and 5 months of leisure time each year, and because of economic conditions, the school boy or girl does not find odd jobs as he did 10 or 20 years ago. The answer, in my humble opinion, is an extension of youth activities and movements such as the Boy Scouts, boys clubs, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Y. M. H. A., and 4-H clubs. In one city an old police station was taken over by a boys club and in 6 months juvenile delinquency appreciably diminished. Here in Washington, D. C., juvenile delinquency has declined as much as 75 percent in some precincts since the organization of the Metropolitan Police Boys' Clubs.

These are but isolated instances which can be duplicated in thousands of communities. If they have worked merely as an incidental activity, how much more effective would they be if given concerted attention. The facilities we have, in every community. All that is needed is the leadership, and a little energy. Every community should have a coordinating council. Every community should have youth movements. And it is the function of the State and the National Governments to lend a hand by furnishing the leadership and if necessary the funds to start these movements and keep them going. I mean things now being sponsored by the American Legion, such as junior baseball, citizenship training, boys' towns, school medals, school patrols, and so forth. Time does not permit me to mention activities of other patriotic organizations of which there are many, especially in the V. F. W.

At this point in my discussion I wish to insert an interesting and relevant article entitled "Crime Prevention," which is written by an inmate of our State Reformatory for Women at Shakopee, Minn., and which has been sent to me by Supt. Estelle Jamieson, who is in charge of that institution. Not knowing that the article was to be used in this way, it is interesting, and especially so, coming from the inside by one who knows the problem from sad experience. Read it: Crime Prevention, by Harriet F.

CRIME PREVENTION

(By Harriet F.)

The problem of crime prevention is not the concern of penologists alone but should be of vital concern to all intelligent people. Crime affects all directly or indirectly. The study of the dread diseases that have brought suffering to humanity has paid large dividends to the world—layman and scientist alike profiting. So, too, can the study of crime by penologists benefit the world. However, the knowledge gained by such study must be given to the public. Society in general needs education along these lines, and it is the duty of the penologist to bring this knowledge before the public and make them realize that it is their problem.

Groups of penologists hold meetings attended by other penologists; they exchange theories; they discuss the problem. They write books containing much valuable information, but these books are for other penologists. They do not reach the general public, who are the ones who pay the taxes, among whom the lawbreakers were born and raised, and to whom the transgressors will eventually return after incarceration, and who are the ones that should make a place for them if they are to be expected to become law-abiding citizens.

The public must be taken into the confidence of penologists if we are to begin at the right end of the penal question—crime prevention—rather than at the wrong end—rehabilitation. Moral rehabilitation is a splendid thing and worthy of the study and support of everyone, and a very necessary element in the cases that have gone beyond the preventable point; but if the crime be prevented it is far better. The public must be educated in all phases of the crime question. If they can be made to realize what a large part they can play in the prevention of crime, it will follow that the right-minded ones will do their share toward the furthering of this aim.

There is no better place in which Minnesotans can begin this worthy undertaking than in the Twin Cities. These two cities, being the largest in the State, are a mecca for the rural young folk who, thinking opportunity for success lies at one's finger tips in this larger community, come filled with boundless faith, courage, and beautiful, vital youth, but usually very little money. The money melts away surprisingly fast and they are left in their youthful ignorance to the mercy of whatever elements first hold out a guiding hand. It is the duty of every decent citizen to do his share toward providing for this contingency by doing what is in his power to see that this guiding hand is the right kind. Suitable lodgings and assistance should be made available to these bewildered and friendless young people without a lot of red tape. "We do not care who your parents are; we want to help you!" should be the attitude of such a place. Food, shelter, and sympathetic understanding should be the first to be offered, followed by whatever type of assistance is needed in each individual case. You say that it is not sensible to hand out charity promiscuously; that persons not deserving would take advantage? To that we can only say "We should rather be fooled a thousand times than to feel that once we turned away some deserving soul until it was too late." Don't you, too, think it would be a sad thing to know that because help was denied a girl in a crucial moment, her burden became too heavy for her to bear alone, and she by some illegitimate means tried to help herself; or, having lost all hope, sought utter oblivion and wandered ever after through a dark valley, never finding peace or rest.

We who are incarcerated hear often the phrase, "Our debt to society," but is it true that we, because we have transgressed the laws of society, are the only ones who owe a debt to society? No! By no means. You, each and every one, owe your debt to society because you are a member of society. It is all of us, good and bad, who make up society, and we all have a duty and a debt which we shall owe until we are no longer mortal clay.

We know only too well what pitfalls beset the path of youth, headstrong and eager to climb the ladder of success in a few brilliant strides. Youth is ever like that, and would we want it to be much different? No; of course, we wouldn't. It is because of the eager, vital fire of youth that more of our great and wonderful things come into existence. What we must do is help and encourage so that none of this fine energy will be expended in worthless pursuits. What greater satisfaction can we get, what greater charity can we give than that found in helping some young woman to find her place in the world, and knowing that because of that, someone has found the world a little better place in which to live?

The third phase of the crime problem which particularly appeals to me and which is truly appalling is the almost overwhelming problem of recidivism. Turning again to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for statistics, we find that last year, of the 554,376 individuals who were arrested and fingerprinted, 252,057 of them had previous records of criminal activity. It is impossible to pick up any metropolitan newspaper without reading of some crime being committed by an ex-convict or some paroled convict. Last summer in my own State a brutal triple murder occurred near Osseo by August Yaeger, who boasted of no less than eight convictions and prison sentences, only to be paroled and pardoned time and again. I am happy to add that these acts of ill-advised clemency did not occur in my State.

I think Mr. Hoover was correct when he observed:

Reformation, theoretically, is always possible as there are some who can be rehabilitated; but reformation, practically, of confirmed, degenerate, habitual criminals is so rare that in applying the parole principle it becomes a crime and nothing else to indulge indiscriminately in the hope that this type of criminal can be reformed, and to make society pay the penalty for what is so often proved to be an error in judgment, based upon a sentimental, ill-considered viewpoint of individual criminals rather than a consideration of the entire problem.

This type of criminal, of course, can be treated in only one way; he must be incarcerated for life or until such time as he is rehabilitated. After all, prisons exist in order that society might be protected.

Certainly most convicts must come out of prison sooner or later. Parole properly administered as we try to do it in Minnesota can be of immeasurable value, and its facilities should be extended to all criminals who have learned the error of their ways and have an honest desire to redeem themselves and take their places in the communities where they settle. But they must be given a helping hand—those that are worthy of reclamation are worthy of assistance. It costs the State $416.41 a year to keep a prisoner in the Minnesota State prison, and at the present time we spend in Minnesota only $44.12 to supervise a criminal a year. Other States doubtless have similar figures.

Work is a necessity for those who would lead an exemplary life. Unless they can find work after release and be given an opportunity to make an honest living they must become public charges or revert to crime. I submit it is not at all unreasonable to consider subsidizing a convict upon his release from prison during his period of rehabilitation, at the same time placing a high penalty upon the violation of the terms of his release. The violation of parole is indeed a breach of confidence and as such it should be as great a crime as stealing. While I know of no State which has had the foresight to approach the problem of recidivism by first giving every assistance to the released convict, nevertheless I am convinced of the validity of such a program. The public interest involved would more than warrant the experiment, and I hope we can help the idea to take shape in the near future.

No honest citizen, I am certain, favors the widespread menace of crime, yet unfortunately in most instances we have done much talking and have taken little action. The time has now arrived when there must be not only 100-percent concentration of interest in the crime problem, but 100-percent action as well.

Crime can be brought under control through effective law enforcement, an extension of crime-prevention programs, and the realistic tackling of the problem of recidivism. May we dedicate every fiber of energy to the meeting and conquering of the menace of lawlessness.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Chairman, if there is one branch of the Federal Government which must be above suspicion at all times, it is the Federal judiciary. The last hope of a free people in a free country is the court of law which deals out justice to rich and poor alike, regardless of race, color, or creed. The cornerstone of our faith in a true democracy must always be an unfaltering reliance in the integrity of those men who wear the robes of justice and sit upon the Federal bench.

In these days of unrest throughout the world, of economic distress at home, of changing social conditions both here and abroad, we must keep true to our course. If we are to preserve our democracy we must make doubly sure that those who are entrusted with the honor of holding public office are persons of the highest integrity. As Attorney General Murphy said in a recent speech:

Whatever else men will tolerate from democratic government to preserve liberty, they will not tolerate injustice, and that means they will not tolerate something wrong with the courts.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, there is something wrong with the courts, something radically wrong. We see the following headlines in a recent newspaper article:

Seven More United States Judges Face Ouster—Murphy Bares Wide Scope of Criminal Quiz as President Accepts Thomas Resignation.

Reading further we find this:

Two Federal judges sitting within the confines of New York City and five members of the Federal bench in other judicial circuits now face investigations similar to those which led to the indictment of Circuit Court Judge Martin T. Manton and the resignation of Thomas.

What is wrong? Why are these men, whose characters should be above reproach, facing an investigation by the Department of Justice and possible indictments for malfeasance in office?

I think I know one of the answers and a possible cure for the trouble. Section 132 of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909, provides that:

SEC. 238. (Criminal Code, sec. 132.) Accepting bribe; judicial office. Whoever, being a judge of the United States, shall in anywise accept or receive any sum of money, or other bribe, present, or reward, or any promise, contract, obligation, gift, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, with the intent to be influenced thereby in any opinion, judgment, or decree in any suit, controversy, matter, or cause depending before him, or because of any such opinion, ruling, decision, judgment, or decree, shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than 15 years, or both; and shall be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States (R. S. No. 5499; Mar. 4, 1909, c. 321, No. 132, 35 Stat. 1112).

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the present penalties are severe enough. A Federal judge, whose office and integrity should be above reproach and suspicion, when found guilty of violating his trust, should face a punishment that is both severe and certain. The public will not and should not have to tolerate graft and corruption on the Federal bench.

Perhaps the assurance of speedy justice and the infliction of severe penalties will act as a strong deterrent on the desire to misuse the high office and position of influence to which our Federal judges are appointed.

About 2 months ago I introduced a bill to amend the present Criminal Code, which I have just cited. My bill provides that any judge found guilty of having violated the law as heretofore stated shall be fined not less than $50,000 nor more than $100,000 or imprisoned for a period of from 15 years to life, or both.

If we are going to clean up the Federal courts, let us keep them clean. I believe that enactment into law of the amendment I have proposed, which increases the present maximum fine from $20,000 to $100,000 and the prison sentence from a maximum of 15 years to life, will have a salutary effect upon the future conduct of those to whom we entrust the duties of a Federal judge.

Mr. THOMAS. S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I have been delighted during the debate this afternoon to hear a number of gentlemen quote from a very high authority. I do not want the membership to think that these two gentlemen to whom I refer are the only ones who can quote from that same authority.

The gentleman from California quoted these words:

When I was a child I spake as a child, but when I became a man I put away childish things.

The gentleman on my side of the aisle gave another quotation, also a good one, from the same source—

As ye sow so shall ye reap.

I want to quote one or two.

Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free.

The immediate quotation I would like to give with reference to this bill, if I only had the full time to discuss adequately this bill and some comments I have heard today, is as follows:

Where there is no vision the people perish.

I listened with great interest to my friend from the far West, the minority leader having charge of time on this bill, when he spoke of the state of the Union. He paid tribute to the pioneers. I also know something about the pioneers, not only in the East and in the Middle West, but in the far West. I verily believe it took superpioneers to conquer that region in the far Southwest where the gentleman and I live.

I am reminded of these words concerning the pioneers and I would like to pass on this tribute:

When the soldier leads an assault in battle he does it in the blare of trumpets and the roll of drums. The charge lasts but a moment. He knows, whether he lives or dies, that eternal fame is his reward. Not so with the pioneer. When this soldier of peace assaults the wilderness, no bugle sounds a charge. Savage beasts and still more savage men wait to ambush him. He blazes the trails, fells the trees, turns the streams, and plants his own rude stakes. Self-satisfied society accepts his toil without compensation and smiles at his crudities. His self-possessed soul keeps its finger on his lips and no lamentations are heard.

When joyous civilization comes tripping with unsoiled sandals over the trails he has blazed, when seats of learning and temples of worship dot the land, his youth is gone, hope is chastened into silence, and he sinks into a dreamless bivouac under the stars. The world merely sponges his name from the lists and shudders in horror at his rough and rugged ways. But he is content. The shadows of the wilderness have been chased away. Savage beasts and savage men have fled. Fields ripen to golden grain and perfumes of flowers and songs of children gladden all the land. He smiles upon the coming generation and is content.

This is the type of men who made this country and we national lawmakers owe them and their courageous women more than mere lip service and praise. I wish to say to my friend from California that to the extent that he glorifies the virtues of our pioneer forebears I certainly agree with him, but I do not agree in wishing to return to those days. We can no more turn back the clock of time, we can no more go back to the covered-wagon days of our ancestors than France in 1820 could go back to 1788. We cannot turn back the clock of time, nor would we. But I do agree that we ought to provide a suitable reward for the men and the women who have blazed these trails and made America what it is.

As I look around me now and see in this gallery on my left those fine young people, I wonder whether we are going to stand for a little America or whether we are determined to stand for a big America? I am not a defeatist. I am not chilled by the gloom and despair which seems to prevail over on the left side of the aisle. I agree with my friend from California when he says we ought to stand for such appropriations as are needed and are good, but I am not thinking merely of my own appropriations. When I voted early today on two amendments, one relating to the far South and another one to the Columbia River, I was not thinking alone of Arizona, but of a greater America. In the bill before us today I find that an appropriation which I believe ought to be there is not there. We should build; the country, the future, these young people will hold us responsible if we sit down here in despair and let our country be ravished by insects, let our soil be swept into the sea, and let the great engineering talent and ability we have go to waste while we wring our hands in despair over social and financial maladjustments and try to turn back to resume a program which our fathers knew.

Just this morning this letter came to me:

Mr. MURDOCK, may I humbly remind you that there would be no overproduction of cotton or other commodities to trade to foreign countries if our own people had money to buy the things they need. In fact, the only thing we see an overproduction in here is the flies we have this year from lettuce rotting in the fields.

Mr. MURDOCK, if you could be here now and see the people barely existing and desperate for work I think your heart would bleed. They must have money to buy the things that are here for them. It is their rightful inheritance. Why not national dividends to all citizens in interest-free, tax-free United States notes? The vague idea of money and its functions that the people entertained in the past is now a thing of the past. A balance between money and production (services and commodities) is exchange.

America is in the balance. Not a matter of silver and gold but food and shelter and all useful things. The call now is for statesmanship—

And so on, and so on.

I agree with the sentiment in that letter, and I wanted to read it into the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, I, too, want to balance the Budget, but that is not my first consideration. Let us put first things first. Let us be less anxious to balance the Budget and more anxious to balance our economy. Let us see to it that we build America, that we build dams and power plants, and that we do the things which lordly man is supposed to do as the master of creation. More pioneering remains to be done in this country than has already been done. Let us build this country which our pioneer ancestors conquered in its raw state and chased away the shadows of wild beasts and savage men. We have all the necessary talent and we have the economic ability to do it. Have we the courage? I tell you, it is a defeatist attitude when we are gripped with fear that we are getting our books out of balance and too much written in red ink.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am sorry time will not permit me to yield at this point.

Among many other things, this bill concerns commerce. While I shall not be able to look far into this bill, I do wish to say, echoing what the gentleman from California said, that I want it understood that we out West can produce better beef than they can produce in the Argentine. [Applause.] But I am not content merely to dwell on that one phase of international commerce. Why is it that our country is willing to take beef from the Argentine? I am assured that some of the great American packing houses have gone into the Argentine, and they are using cheap labor to can beef there and send it here. That should be stopped, but I want to go further than merely stopping that practice, for it is only a part of the evil. Certainly, I want our Nation to trade with all nations. I believe commerce is the golden chain that links nations together and that international trade is conducive to peace, but I am determinedly opposed to permitting American capital to go into foreign lands, produce goods with cheap foreign labor, and depend on the American market for their sales.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. Let me say that I visited the Argentine exhibit in the San Francisco Exposition on Monday of this week and saw there the Argentine canned beef of Swift and Armour on exhibition.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It is a fact which we have long suspected and some of us have known. It is alarming how much American capital has been invested abroad to produce goods for our markets. We have to go further than canned beef and stop other importations of goods from abroad.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. The reason our industrialists are moving to foreign countries, establishing automobile plants in England and other countries and packing plants in South America, for instance, is that we are running them out of this country. Our tariff walls have caused them to jump over these walls and leave our country and leave our labor here as it is. In this manner they have in part brought about this depression. Is not that a fact?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I respect the judgment of my friend from Arkansas, and there may be some correctness in his diagnosis. Whatever the cause may be and whatever the remedy, I do know this—that we are letting too much American capital be invested abroad in industrial concerns producing goods for the American market to the detriment and loss of our own labor. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call your attention and the attention of the Members of this House to the fact that there is one group of our people who are deserving of consideration at this time.

In these days of the so-called agricultural surpluses, and in these days where funds and means are being provided for what are termed "the underprivileged," it seems only reasonable and fair that we give consideration to a relatively large group of young people who are under institutional care.

According to the last information available from the United States Department of Commerce, I find that we have 2,240 foster homes, with an enrollment of 242,929 children. Here are nearly a quarter of a million unfortunates who are surely where they are through "no fault of their own." They are not in a position to bring any pressure on Congress. These young people are found in many denominational as well as public institutions. Even if they are found in denominational institutions, I contend they are a group of people who should have, and deserve, public interest and support. I have had an opportunity of knowing many citizens of our country whose childhood was spent in these institutions, and I know many splendid citizens who have had this training.

In investigating this matter I find from the Surplus Commodities Corporation that they have furnished some food to comparable groups, and it appears that no further legislation would be necessary in order to provide these institutions with the products of the Surplus Commodities Corporation. I personally feel that these institutions should be given first consideration by the Surplus Commodities Corporation from the funds that are already available under the present laws. I feel sure that if the Members of Congress evidence the same opinion the Surplus Commodities Corporation would be willing to follow our recommendations and will see that these young people are properly provided for.

I would like to ask the Members of the House if they do not think this would be a splendid opportunity of legislating for one group of people who are in no position to bring any political pressure to bear on us.

If this suggestion meets the approval of the Members of this House, I hope at a later date to introduce a resolution asking the Speaker to appoint a committee to take this suggestion up with the Administrator of the Surplus Commodities Corporation and work out a plan that would be fair and just to all of the institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE].

THE GOLDEN JUBILEE OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON—A CENTURY OF PROGRESS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this year the State of Washington is celebrating the golden jubilee of its admission into the Union as a State. In 1833 white civilization was started in the Pacific Northwest, at that time known as the Oregon Territory, at Fort Nisqually, a few miles south of what later became the city of Tacoma, and within a very short distance of what are now Fort Lewis and McChord Field—these two latter undertakings are great Federal enterprises, representing one of the great Army cantonments and the new Army airfield of the Pacific Northwest—a half-century later a group of sturdy pioneers gathered together to draft a constitution for a new State. After working assiduously night and day they composed their differences and jointly gave birth to a covenant which pronounced that Washington forever would be the sympathetic abiding place of spiritual freedom, tolerance, and sound government. Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, soon thereafter proclaimed this Providence-favored land of snow-capped mountains, sky-blue, pure water lakes, land-locked waters, verdant hills, fertile valleys, timbered hillsides, a sovereign State.

FIFTY-YEAR SPAN OF BIRTH TO FRUITION

In 1889 a distant backwoods territory of straggling and struggling settlements became Washington, the State, encompassing and embracing the hopes and dreams of her crusading, pioneer founders. Myriads of old and young, identified with this rustic country, gathered to rejoice, holding celebrations wherever assemblies could be gotten together in this spacious but sparsely settled land.

Today, 50 years later, and but a little more than 100 years after the first whites arrived, a proud State of nearly 2,000,000 Americans proclaims its vigorous leadership in fisheries, agriculture, commerce, and culture, and pauses to celebrate a real century of progress and its golden jubilee year of statehood.

WASHINGTON, A GREAT AND FAVORED STATE

Today the Evergreen State of Washington stands supreme in the Nation in the production of lumber and foremost in the production of wheat, dairy and poultry commodities, quality fruits and berries, bulbs and flowers, mineral products, vegetables and divers and widely variegated commodities of the fields and hills, made possible through the unity of man's effort and ingenuity and the blessings of Providence.

Today Washington State stands preeminent in citizenship and enlightenment, being first in public education, high-school pupils per capita, literacy, and literature reading. Superior highways ribbon the State—highways that transcend mountains, overcome lakes, and, on massive structures of engineering genius, straddle inland waters, thus drawing ever constantly together the many enterprising communities which dot its 70,000 square miles of area.

NATURE ASSISTED MAN TO ACHIEVE RESULTS

Such a record of progress, however, within two brief spans of 50 years, can hardly be ascribed exclusively to human minds and hands. Nature provided a gorgeous, awe-inspiring setting for this remarkable progress. The climate was unparalleled, devoid of extreme temperatures. Earthquakes, tornadoes, hailstorms, blizzards were and remain unknown in our State's history.

TACOMA, THE CITY OF DESTINY

Naturally, every community in Washington State will pause during this year of 1939 to celebrate and invite others also to celebrate this golden jubilee year, in company with local inhabitants. Hence, we are endeavoring in every way not only to ask our personal friends but also to induce as many others as we can reach, to visit the State of Washington this year. Above all, my home city of Tacoma, the "city of destiny," would delight to welcome you Members of the House during the week of July 16. During that week Tacoma has been officially recognized as the 1939 host for the entire State of Washington. Among outstanding events already scheduled will be a golf tournament, water carnival, a monster all-State civic dinner, boxing matches, State-wide parades, mardi gras, an Indian village, the homecoming of prominent sons and daughters, an air circus. A spectacular 3-day pageant will be put on in the historic Tacoma Stadium. This is the first lighted open-air field west of the Mississippi River and is illuminated by the electricity furnished by that municipal enterprise which provides the cheapest electric power in the United States. It is interesting to note that the stadium was the first high-school stadium in the United States, that it seats 30,000 people, that it is erected in a natural amphitheater, and that its occupants, while comfortably seated, may have their souls exalted by the contemplation of the majesty of nature in the form of incomparable Puget Sound and that magnificent natural eminence which the Indians call Tacoma, the "Mountain of Frozen Snow Water," and which is designated on maps as Mount Rainier.

Tacoma is a superb place in which to take your vacation and to use as a headquarters for vacation outings. Not only is this favored city surrounded by Nature's abundance but also by man-made structures, as revealed by sheets of 20 hand-colored photographic stamps. I am presenting to each Member of Congress a sheet of these stamps on behalf of the Young Men's Business Club of Tacoma, of which organization I am proud to be a member. These stamps may be used on the backs of envelopes and should serve as friendly invitations to you to visit the State of Washington, and especially my home city of Tacoma, from July 16 to July 23, this coming summer.

TACOMA COLORED STICKER STAMPS

Each of the scenes depicted upon the sheet of 20 colored stamps is within 5 to 60 minutes' ride by automobile from Tacoma. The only exception is Bremerton, site of the Puget Sound Navy Yard. But when the Tacoma Narrows Bridge, made possible by this Congress and the P. W. A., is completed in a year or so from now, the navy yard will likewise be less than 60 minutes' distance.

If you will examine the stamps when you receive them, you will see pictures of Stadium High School, a reconstruction of an original railroad tourist hotel, a building of French chateau architecture and recognized as one of the outstanding and most beautifully built and located high schools in America. Lincoln High School is also depicted upon a stamp. Fronting this high school is a striking statue of our sixteenth President, after whom the school was named. A picture of a sample highway bordering Puget Sound is presented and a study of this picture will indicate why it is that we of the State of Washington regard our State highways as second to none in the Nation.

FORT NISQUALLY AND RAINIER NATIONAL PARK

Note the picture of old Fort Nisqually, the reconstruction of which, in the confines of Point Defiance Park, Tacoma, was effectuated by the activities of that enterprising group of optimistic young men comprising the Young Men's Business Club of Tacoma. Fort Nisqually was the pioneer fort on Puget Sound, originally constructed by a factor of the Hudson Bay Co. Note the great tree shown on one of the stamps, which loggers are engaged in cutting down. This is a likeness of a typical forest giant and symbolic of the great lumber industry of the Pacific Northwest. A picture is shown of skiing in Rainier National Park. Here can be found a skiing paradise which is the cynosure of skiing enthusiasts from all over the United States.

THE PUYALLUP FAIR AND POINT DEFIANCE PARK

In the enterprising city of Puyallup, in my district, 12 miles from Tacoma, there annually takes place the Western Washington Fair, one of the 10 outstanding fairs of the Nation. For 1 week in early fall—this year commencing September 18—are exhibited here the superb products of the rich soil of our numerous farms. A visit to this fair would be a never-to-be-forgotten event. Next we see a picture of fishing at Point Defiance Park, with our great, perpetually snow-capped mountain in the background. Point Defiance Park is recognized as one of the three most beautiful parks in the United States. It is operated by a municipal corporation set up under State law known as the Metropolitan Park District of Tacoma, consisting of five nonpartisan elected officials who function without salary. Point Defiance Park embraces an area of 640 acres of natural woodland and beautiful gardens, surrounded on three sides by the sparkling waters of that great inland sea known as Puget Sound. Fishing for salmon off Point Defiance Park is a sport which has attracted lovers of the out of doors from every section of America. Not to have enjoyed this pastime is to have missed one of the treats of a lifetime. Salmon is a gamey, sporty fish, beautiful to behold and ineffably delicious to devour.

TACOMA'S MUNICIPALLY OWNED POWER SYSTEM

Note the picture of the dam at Lake Cushman, with the Olympic Mountains in the background. Here is one of the sources of hydroelectric energy which provides the cheapest electrical power sold in America. This is the site of one of the hydroelectric plants of Tacoma's municipally owned electrical system and is the pride of every citizen. The outlet of this comparatively small lake was dammed and a much larger lake was thereby formed.

M'CHORD FIELD AND FORT LEWIS

Our colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has often dilated at length upon the superior advantages of Tacoma's municipally owned light plant.

Hangars at McChord Field, the new Northwest Army airport, are depicted. This is an enterprise in which we Members of Congress who made it possible may take justifiable pride. We authorized it and appropriated the money for it during the past 2 years. One of the stamps represents a picture of the artistic entrance to Fort Lewis, an Army cantonment of 70,000 acres of land donated to the United States Government by the patriotic citizens of Pierce County. The land cost $2,000,000, and on it the Government has erected architecturally attractive structures costing millions of dollars, in which are housed soldiers of the United States. On this area during the World War was trained the famous Ninety-first Division.

Reference has already been made to the Bremerton Navy Yard, a scene of which, with the Olympic Mountains in the background, is on one of the stamps.

A picture of one section of Tacoma's business district with the great mountain in the background is presented. Note the proximity of the mountain and the wooded foothills to this enterprising, bustling community.

TACOMA NARROWS BRIDGE

Next will be seen a photographic likeness of the great Tacoma Narrows Bridge, as it will look when completed. This bridge surmounts the narrowest section of lower Puget Sound and connects the vast hinterland of the Olympic Peninsula with the rest of the State. It cuts off 70 miles of transportation for those who wish to go from one section of the State to the other. Its completion will connect Bremerton and Fort Lewis and will serve as an effective arm facilitating national defense.

A scene of that superb mountain so loved by John Muir, the great naturalist, is shown on another stamp. This is a view as taken from Alta Vista Ridge and indicates how vegetation, flowers, and trees blossom in abundance in immediate juxtaposition to the snow fields.

OTHER GRAPHIC SCENES ARE APPEALING

Note the great stack from which smoke is pouring. This is the tallest cement smelter stack in the world and rises 575 feet in the air. In this smelter are employed hundreds of workmen living in a model community, workmen who belong to organized labor.

Scenes revealing that our area is a sportsman's paradise are shown. Here boating, swimming, horseback riding, golf, tennis, baseball, football—all outdoor sports find their full flower. One picture portrays a section of Tacoma Harbor, one of the five best harbors in the world and one of two superb deep-water harbors of the United States. In this harbor could be anchored safely and in amply deep water the entire navies of Great Britain, France, and the United States, with room to spare. A picture of a sailboat scudding before a breeze in marvelous Puget Sound is worthy of study.

DAFFODIL FESTIVAL

In the Puyallup Valley, in the Sumner-Puyallup area, there takes place every spring the blanketing of vast fields by blooming, gorgeous, golden daffodils. It is a wonderful sight to behold. A daffodil festival celebrates the occasion every year. For miles one can see daffodils growing in every direction in the springtime, always with Mount Rainier-Tacoma somewhere on the horizon.

So, my colleagues, I hope that the stamps I present to you will give you a glimpse of the countless attractions of which the Tacoma area in the State of Washington can boast.

In conclusion, I cannot emphasize too vehemently that our section is one of the blessed sections of all the world, never too hot in summer, never too cold in winter. Green woods, abundant shrubbery, lovely homes—homes the majority of which have been bought and paid for by workers in factories and stores. Come out there this summer and drink deep of the winey atmosphere. See for yourselves that I am not exaggerating. Sleep comfortably every night the entire summer. This is the State which invites you to celebrate with it its golden jubilee July 16 to 23, 1939. This is the only American State named after an American patriot or President. It is in the far Pacific Northwest. It holds America's last frontier. In it will be found America's newest national park. Within its borders will be found scenery indescribably grand and arresting. In it will be found people who extend the warm handclasp of ready friendship. In it will be found the progressive spirit which is typical of the great West.

So come out there and be our guest. We guarantee you the time of your lives. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I am taking these few minutes to talk to you about an item in this bill which provides for the Sixteenth Census of the United States.

When our Constitution was made there was a clause put in it which provided that within 3 years after the meeting of the First Congress of the United States there should be a census taken of the people of the United States. The reason for this was because the Constitution also provided that after the first allotment for membership in the House of Representatives such allotments should be made on the basis of the population of the several States of the Union.

In this bill, Mr. Chairman, there is an appropriation of $45,100,000 for the purpose of taking the Sixteenth Decennial Census. Of this appropriation, $21,900,000 is to be used the first year and the balance is to be used the second year if it is necessary.

Of this amount for the first year's appropriation, $1,462,142 is for the permanent service in the Bureau here in Washington and $2,204,576 is for temporary service incident to this work during the first year, making a total of $3,666,718. This item represents the cost of the work within the Bureau proper for the first year.

Fifteen million one hundred and sixty-three thousand and thirty-one dollars is the estimated cost of 560 supervisors who are to be selected throughout the country and 140,000 enumerators who are to be employed throughout the United States. The balance of this item of $21,900,000, to wit, $3,070,251, is for printing supplies and other material incident to this work and distribution.

The increased cost of the 1940 census as compared with the census of 1930 is estimated to be an increase of $5,818,844 and is accounted for not only by the increase of the population which we have estimated to be from 8 to 10 percent, but principally because of the operating cost in our expanding Government functions of which this Bureau has charge. The Bureau now serves and collects and distributes statistics for 21 independent activities or functions, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may include this list as well as two items in specification sheets, at this point in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

By projects or functions

1. Population	$10,665,951
2. Agriculture	5,464,425
3. Florists and nurseries	52,979
4. Irrigation	46,180
5. Drainage	27,649
6. Distribution	2,756,930
7. Mines	72,549
8. Outlying possessions	333,406
9. Wealth, debt, and taxation
10. Electrical industries	26,536
11. Manufactures	961,623
12. Current inquiries	117,852
13. Red cedar shingles	13,964
14. Institutional population	61,525
15. Marriage and divorce	50,245
16. Vital statistics (annual)	606,511
17. Vital statistics (other projects)
18. Cotton and oils	396,205
19. Financial statistics of States and cities	222,326
20. Statistical abstract	23,144
21. Publicity	100,000
Total	22,000,000

THE INCREASE IN THE NUMBER OF UNITS TO BE ENUMERATED

The natural growth of population is still a major factor causing the increased cost of each succeeding decennial census. This population growth causes increases in the number of units which must be canvassed in the agricultural, business, and industrial phases of the decennial census. During the past decade there has also been a sharp increase in the number of farms and small business establishments resulting from economic conditions during the depression—conditions which forced many persons who normally would have been employees for wages to become self-sufficient operators of small farms or of small shops and stores.

Both the natural increase of population and the depression have resulted in an abnormal increase in the number of persons seeking employment and in the number of unemployed. Whereas the population as a whole has increased approximately 8 percent, the number of workers for whom unemployment and occupation data must be secured has increased by approximately 12 percent.

THE INCREASE IN OPERATING COSTS

Allowance must also be made, in comparing the estimated cost of the Sixteenth Decennial Census with the cost of the Fifteenth Decennial Census, for the higher operating costs which now exist and which may increase still more before the completion of the next census. There are few, if any, items of costs in the Budget for the Sixteenth Decennial Census which have not increased since 1930. Printing, office supplies, furniture, rented tabulating equipment, wages of office employees, and many other items can be cited in support of this statement.

Mr. KERR. It will be interesting to you gentlemen to know something of the development of the Census Bureau of the United States. The present permanent establishment of the Bureau of the Census was consummated in 1902 and its duties have been progressively extended each year since.

Prior to 1790, only several European countries had ever taken account of their inhabitants. The United States was the first to establish the periodical census and this was required, as I stated at the beginning of my remarks, by the Constitution, which provided that within 3 years after the first Congress, representation should be apportioned to each State.

The census of 1790 was taken by the district marshals in those States whose districts were contiguous with State lines. These marshals compiled the census and then turned the matter over to the clerks of the court and the clerks transmitted the data to the President. This method of taking the census was continued from 1790 to 1850.

In 1800 and at the second taking of our census in the United States, Mr. Jefferson and Dr. Dwight asked that that census not only include the number of inhabitants, but that it group the natives of this country and the aliens and the citizens and the children of aliens. At this time the supervision of the census was given to the Secretary of State.

In 1810, the census was taken under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and its duties enlarged, and at that time they required the enumerators to make a note of the manufacturing establishments in the United States, and to make a further return as to how many naturalized foreigners there were in America.

As you will notice, during all this time the matter of taking a census was a very simple one and it is only in recent years that it has grown to present proportions which are very large and most interesting.

In taking the census in 1830 and 1840, its functions were still further enlarged to cover economic data in this country.

In 1840 there was some criticism throughout the country of the inadequacy of the census and a Census Board was established to make plans to take the census and to get a more nearly accurate return. This Board was composed of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Postmaster General, and the Board had prepared forms and questions and submitted them in order to record the information more accurately.

In 1850 this Department was placed under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. Up to that time the Department had been shifted from place to place. It had nothing much to do except to take the census every 10 years. First, it went to the Secretary of State, then to the Secretary of the Treasury, and afterward the Department of the Interior. The duties of the census takers were expanded both in 1860 and 1870 and also in 1880. The supervisors and enumerators were selected for the work throughout the country in 1880. In 1890 the work of the census activity was further enlarged and the reports of its work and data concerning many important facts and findings were published and distributed throughout the country. The present Bureau of the Census was permanently established in 1902, and under the act of 1929 every census taken since then has been governed by the rules and regulations of that act. It is interesting to note that there have been outstanding fine officials who have been in charge of the census activities of this country. First, there was Mr. Coxe, who was in charge of its activities. After him came Mr. Kennedy, then Mr. DeBowe, Mr. Walker, Mr. Harris, Mr. Rogers, and others, up to the present most efficient Director, Mr. Austin. Mr. Rogers at one time was a resident of my State and for a number of years was the corporation commissioner of the State of North Carolina. Mr. Austin is one of the most faithful and most active and most conscientious officials of this Government. He is always kind and courteous, and it is a real pleasure to do business with him. In my opinion he is one of our outstanding fine public officials of this Government, and we have a right to be proud of the great unselfish service that he has done this great country of ours. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, the milk investigation which was authorized by this House is now in its third week. It is perfectly apparent that there is a great deal more to this situation than the mere alleged "bootlegging" of cream into Washington from the State of Indiana. As a member of the subcommittee conducting this investigation, it is my intention to see to it that all of the facts are brought to light, and that the real reasons for the conditions existing on the Washington market are uncovered and held up to public scrutiny.

You all remember the sensational stories which appeared in the newspapers on March 5 telling about the seizure of a truckload of cream from Lafayette, Ind. You also remember the intimations carried in these newspaper reports that the cream was not fit for human consumption, and that a great crime had been committed. It now appears that this cream was of the highest quality, and not only compared favorably with the Washington cream, but some people think that the tests of it show that it is superior to that which is locally produced. It was over this truckload of cream that seven people were arrested and seven patrol wagons were employed by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, and all of those persons, irrespective of their participation in this alleged "bootlegging," were held for investigation, were retained incommunicado for periods ranging from 8 hours to 22 hours.

The testimony thus far taken before the subcommittee shows that two Washington policemen spent about a week going to Michigan and to Indiana to follow the truck which brought the cream into the District of Columbia, and that all their expenses, including lodging, food, and transportation, were paid by the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association, a cooperative organization of farmers in nearby Maryland and Virginia, supplying almost all of the milk and cream to the Washington market.

Gentlemen should not get away from the fact that this was only a misdemeanor, and that they took two policemen from the force of the District of Columbia and sent them along to spy on this truck through the State of Pennsylvania into the States of Michigan, Illinois, and Indiana.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes.

Mr. HULL. Does not the testimony also disclose that the expenses of these policemen were paid by the Milk Producers' Association?

Mr. SCHULTE. It does. It shows that the Milk Producers' Association paid all of the expenses of these two policemen on a misdemeanor charge, attempting to prove a misdemeanor. The testimony thus far taken shows that two Washington policemen spent about a week on this mission. The testimony which the subcommittee has thus far heard shows how all this came about, but the real reasons and purposes behind it are not quite clear up to this time. It is perfectly apparent, however, that a giant monopoly exists in this market and that a very determined effort is being made to put a Chinese wall around the city of Washington and to keep out of the city all dairy products which are not produced by the thirteen-hundred-odd farmers who make up the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association. This organization is working hand and glove with the National Dairy Products Corporation, which has several subsidiaries in and around Washington, notably Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy, the largest distributor of milk and cream in Washington, and Southern Dairies, the largest manufacturer of ice cream in Washington. The Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy handles and processes all of the surplus milk which is produced by the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association at a very handsome profit to itself, and between the two organizations, seems to have the tightest kind of a grip on milk and cream in the District of Columbia. The subcommittee is attempting to get at the bottom of this situation, and I hope that it will recommend real remedial legislation to destroy this "wall" about the city, and to give to the people of Washington clean, wholesome, and pure milk at a decent and fair price.

One of the things which has amazed me most is the spectacle of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, always complaining to Congress about not having enough policemen to protect the city against armed robbers and desperadoes, permitting two of its detectives, all expenses paid by a private organization, to traipse around the country following a truckload of the finest cream that can be produced, and at the same time detailing other of its detectives and officers to spy on two dairies in Washington in an effort to discredit these dairies and to urge the people of the District of Columbia to believe that any milk or cream which comes from outside Maryland and Virginia is not fit for the people of Washington to drink. I am wondering how the Members of this Congress, all born and raised outside of Washington, ever survived and kept healthy when they were forced to drink milk and cream which was not produced within the Chinese wall of this city.

Since this investigation has started, I have seen a large number of so-called "farmers" who produce milk for the Washington market. They all look to me like prosperous businessmen. They come to the committee meetings dressed in the height of fashion, well groomed, with no evidence of hay or straw about them, and with an utter and complete lack of calluses on their hands. I do not know at what time of the morning they start work, nor at what time they stop, but they do not look like the poor farmers in my State of Indiana who get up before dawn and work with their hands until way after dark. I have no quarrel with farmers of any place. They never get enough for their products, particularly for the milk they produce, and the real farmers in Maryland and Virginia who produce milk for the Washington market are no exception to the rule, but I am greatly puzzled over this whole situation. Farmers in my State produce good, pure, clean milk. They all work hard, and all the members of their family, male and female, are at it from early until late.

The people of Indiana and adjoining States, notably the great city of Chicago, drink this milk and thrive on it. These farmers receive $1.56 per hundredweight for the milk they produce, while the farmers who supply Washington—and those I have seen seem to have plenty of time on their hands, and have every indication and appearance of being gentlemen of the soil rather than toilers—receive $3.16 per hundredweight for all milk which I know cannot be any better than my farmers in Indiana produce 365 days in the year; and yet, Mr. Chairman, this Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association, and this giant monopoly known as the National Dairy Products Corporation, tried to brand the cream which my farmers produce as unfit for human consumption; tried to keep it off this market, and deny to them their constitutional right of selling their products in any part of the United States without restriction and without tariffs being imposed. If this lately developing trade-barrier system continues to grow, we will find ourselves divided for purposes of commerce into 48 separate countries, blacklisting and taxing out of existence the products of neighboring States. Mr. Chairman, the people of Indiana grow tobacco, and it is good tobacco, but yet we do not say to the farmers of Maryland and Virginia to "keep your tobacco at home; it is not fit for us to use." We buy lots of tobacco from Maryland and Virginia, and we think it is a good product, and we welcome it into our State; but we just do not like the idea of having our milk and cream branded as unfit merely because certain people want to maintain their grip of extortion on the throats of the people of this city.

Our State of Indiana is a great agricultural State; our people are industrious and thrifty; they are not afraid to work, and they do work. Our products are famous wherever used, and our milk and cream are no exception to that rule. Why, then, should the District of Columbia, a Federal territory, composed of people originally from every State in the Union, be denied the right to drink milk and cream—pure, clean, healthy milk and cream—produced in the State of Indiana?

I do not know why, if the bringing in of cream from outside of the city of Washington is a crime, and such a heinous crime as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and this Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association seem to think it is, that the penalty for the commission of such a crime is not more than the limit of $10 for the first offense. I cannot understand why an offense which is not even a misdemeanor under the statute, but is merely a petty offense, should receive the personal attention of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the corporation counsel in person, and a large number of his staff and a large corps of police officers and milk inspectors. Boiled down to its final analysis, the situation simply is this, taken at its worst: A local dairy imports a truckload of 200 cans of 40-percent cream from the State of Indiana. The cream is the best that can be produced. The cream is pure, maintained at a proper temperature, and strictly in accordance with all the laws of the District of Columbia. If it is an offense to bring it into the District of Columbia, it is a technical offense and one which does not deserve all of this attention and all of the publicity given to the incident. I have never known the Police Department of Washington and the Commissioners to be so diligent in the enforcement of law. I have never known the corporation counsel to personally conduct a raid and order seven patrol wagons to take seven persons to seven different police precincts and hold them incommunicado for as long as 24 hours without giving them an opportunity to consult a lawyer or to put up bail. When Southern Dairies, an affiliate of the National Dairy Products Corporation, was discovered bringing unlicensed cream into the city of Washington, nothing was said or done about it until a member of the committee, Congressman SHAFER of Michigan, inquired about it before the investigating committee. Then there was action, and then warrants were issued, but, so far as I am now informed, these warrants have never been served.

Statements were not made concerning the impurity of this cream which came into this subsidiary plant of the National Dairy Products Corporation, and which came into the city of Washington upon order of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association. I understand that this cream came either from Maryland or Pennsylvania, and despite the fact that it constituted just as much "bootlegging" as the cream which came from Indiana, it was used by the Southern Dairies and not seized by the police department as was the Indiana cream. I say to you gentlemen of this House that there is something very peculiar about this whole situation, and if you have constituents back home who produce good, pure, clean milk and cream, and because it is not produced in this narrow milkshed in nearby Maryland or Virginia, are shut off the market in Washington, then it might be a good idea, too, for you to try and find out what is going on here and what it is all about.

Mr. Chairman, something must be done to break up this tremendous monopoly on this market. This Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association must be stopped, and somehow we must find out how it secured such a tight grip and hold on the Washington market. One of the National Dairy Products Corporation's subsidiaries in Washington—Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy—actually earned a net profit of $400,000 from the sale of milk and cream to the consumers of Washington during the depression year of 1938. This I say could not have been accomplished without its having the tight grip which this organization has, not only on producers who supply this market with milk and cream but which seems to control most everyone else, including the District of Columbia government. I favor the modification of the milk law of the city of Washington so as to permit the importation of pure, clean milk and cream from any part of the United States under proper safeguards and health protection. I do not want the people of Washington to drink milk which is not good any more than I want the people of Indiana to have that kind of milk, but it is not necessary to build a Chinese wall around this city for the economic benefit of a comparatively few people and deprive 600,000 residents and taxpayers of this city, which is under the control of the Federal Government, of the right to have clean, pure milk at a decent and fair price.

This is not a matter which concerns only the farmers of Indiana and the middle West, but very seriously affects the real dirt farmers of both Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia, and all of the other States of the Union who can and do produce good, clean, wholesome milk, but being unable to spend large sums of money in buying the expensive equipment required by the health regulations of the city of Washington, cannot enjoy this fluid-milk market. If the gentlemen of this House will inquire they will find that all those who have farming areas within their districts have constituents who would like very much to ship milk to Washington, but just cannot get their hands on the necessary money to buy all the "frills" required by the health regulations. If all these unnecessary "frills" and "do-dads" are eliminated, and this Congress passes legislation which requires the doing of only those things which are necessary in the protection of public health, it will not be necessary in order to get a quart of milk, to bring the cow into the parlor, tip your hat to her, furnish her with a room and bath, and then in very polite tones suggest that you would like to have a quart of milk. The cow in this area is fast becoming as sacred as the cows of India, and it is all resulting in the people of Washington paying the highest price for milk, being able to drink but very little of it, and as a result, continuing here a very bad health situation.

The people of Washington are constantly being told by the agents of the two monopolies which control this market, Chestnut Farms Dairy and the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association, that they are most fortunate in being able to get such a fine grade of milk, and that nothing must be done to disturb the situation. In this connection it is very interesting to note that the people of Chicago today are buying milk for 12 cents a quart delivered at the doorstep, and 10 cents a quart if you go to the store for it; that in Gary, Ind., you can buy all the good, clean milk you want for 10 cents a quart delivered at your door, and the same applies to Indianapolis, Evansville, and Elkhart; that in New York City milk sells at the doorstep for 11½ cents and can be purchased in stores at 9½ and 10½ cents; in Pittsburgh, Pa., milk is 11 cents a quart; in Michigan, particularly in Detroit, milk can be bought at the doorstep for 8 and 9 cents a quart, and in stores from 6 to 8 cents a quart; in St. Louis, Mo., you can buy good, clean milk for 11 cents a quart delivered to your doorstep. In Milwaukee, Wis., it is 10 cents a quart, and in Wheeling, W. Va., it is 11 cents. Are you gentlemen of this House coming from these States willing to admit that you and your children are drinking milk which is unfit for human consumption, or do you not contend as I do, that all of us are buying good, clean, pure milk, and the best the market affords? Why then should we build this halo around the cow in the city of Washington and sit supinely by and allow these two giant monopolies to get away with charging the voteless people of Washington 14 cents a quart for the same milk which is purchased in Detroit, Mich., for as low as 6 cents a quart? A comparison of vital statistics and health records of the large cities of the United States with the District of Columbia is not flattering to the Capital of the Nation, and I have no doubt but that the high price of milk here, and the inability of the poor people to buy it, is a contributing factor to our poor health situation.

I am not going to allow these monopolistic organizations, vigorously aided and abetted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Corporation Counsel, Mr. Seal, to pull the wool over my eyes, and to throw mud and dirt at certain independent distributors in the city for the purpose of setting up a smoke screen to hide their real purpose, namely, to keep the consuming public of Washington in their tight grip and to protect a comparatively small number of farmers, to the detriment of 600,000 residents of this Capital City, and these hard-working dirt farmers in every other part of the United States who can and would supply Washington with a decent product at a fair price.

I am amazed, as I sit as a member of the investigating committee, to hear testimony about the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association bragging over their success in having the Commissioners of the District of Columbia pass regulations to keep competing products off this market. It is beyond my comprehension to know why an organization of farmers storm the doors of the health officer of the District of Columbia, demanding that he make health regulations for them to obey more stringent and rigid all the time. It just is not human nature for any individual to ask that he be required to spend more money and more time in the production of a product which he has for sale. The real reason for it all is that if the health officer will keep on making these regulations, keep on making them more strict and rigid, very shortly the bottle of milk in Washington will become as sacred as the cow, and the Police Department will then probably be called upon to convoy the dairy wagons about town, as they deliver milk to the doorsteps of the few who are able to buy it.

We have it in our power to get this whole milk situation in Washington down to a sensible basis, to put the cow in the barn where she belongs, and to eliminate all these "frills" and "do-dads" which constitute nothing more nor less than economic barriers, but which are hailed as modern and progressive health regulations for the protection of the poor people of the city of Washington. We have time to do it in this session of Congress, and I regard it as our solemn duty not to delay, but to enact legislation which will be a model for the rest of the United States, and a warning to all the States that the Federal Government, legislating for its Capital, does not intend to permit trade barriers to grow and throttle competition among the 48 States of the Union.

That means that the farmers within the radius of 50 miles of the District of Columbia are barred from the District of Columbia market. They find it impossible to get into the District of Columbia with their product, because they are not one of the favored few. I am speaking now about the farmers in Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia. They are barred by this great monopoly.

Mr. HULL. I ask the gentleman whether or not he is going to have funds enough to go further into this matter and disclose the connection between the National Dairy Co., for instance, and some of these local institutions.

Mr. SCHULTE. I think we have sufficient funds. We are meeting with quite a few obstacles that block the investigation. Powerful influence is tending to bar this product from the markets of Washington and in that way put up the price to the consumer and drive it down to the farmer. I hold no brief for the farmer, it is true, but I want him to get everything that he is entitled to for the product that he wants to dispose of. It has been proven before our committee that the surplus milk sold to the consumer today costs the consumer 14 cents a quart while the farmer gets only 11½ cents a gallon.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask further whether it would be possible for you to go into the matter of the salaries paid by some of these dairy companies not only to their presidents but to let the people of Washington know where some of the overhead expense falls in the distribution of its milk supply?

Mr. SCHULTE. I am quite certain we are going into the matter very thoroughly. I believe the gentleman is aware of the fact that in the city of Chicago, if I am not mistaken, some of the officers of the national dairies are indicted. Is not that correct?

Mr. HULL. Some 92. I think a subsidiary of the National Dairy Co. is among them; the health officers and various others connected with that alleged conspiracy.

Mr. SCHULTE. But it is about the same kind of conspiracy, I believe, that exists around the District of Columbia.

Mr. HULL. I think if you will investigate further, you will find that the Federal Trade Commission has reported that this conspiracy, this violation of the antitrust law, is in practically every large center of this country.

Mr. SCHULTE. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I feel it is a great honor to be given the privilege to close the debate on what I consider the most important appropriation bill that has come into the House during this session. The Members have been very patient and have taken a great interest in this bill, which calls for $121,000,000. I suggest to the membership of the House that they read the nearly 1,400 pages of hearings on this bill, which has to do with our relations with all foreign countries in the world; hearings which have to do with the Commerce Department, which should be helping domestic trade and some trade with our foreign customers. The hearings have also to do with our entire gigantic Department of Justice.

In closing this debate I cannot refrain, Mr. Chairman, from adding commendation of my distinguished chairman, the Honorable THOMAS MCMILLAN of South Carolina; our committee clerk, Mr. Jack McFall; my colleagues, Mr. MCANDREWS, of Illinois; Mr. RABAUT, of Michigan; Mr. KERR, of North Carolina; and Mr. CALDWELL, of Florida; and Mr. CARTER, the ranking minority Member, from California. These gentlemen worked for over 6 weeks—many times at night—in order to bring you this finished piece of important legislation and upon which we will vote tomorrow. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, when we trimmed $3,000,000 from the Budget estimate, we did that in the face of demands from every department for increased personnnel, promotions, increased activities, and in the face of detailed justifications for these increases. Our report to you, which is printed and in your hands, will indicate where this committee feels further savings should be made. In spite of the cuts we made, the bill comes to you with over $26,000,000 increase over the appropriations a year ago. But most of that increase will be found in the twenty-odd millions for the taking of the new census and over which amount we have little or no control. The same thing is true in other increases which are forced through new legislation, and in the case of the Justice Department appropriations, it will be found in the appointment of many new judges. The hearings will disclose to you how taxpayers' money is forced out of the Treasury every time some of this new legislation is passed and every time Congress authorizes the appointment of a new judge. Therefore, many items which the committee would have cut are frozen and the cutting is impossible. The membership of this committee feels that every appropriation bill should be cut to meet the present critical condition of our Treasury.

Your committee began work on this bill fully realizing the condition of the Federal Treasury. It took into account the fact that this Government owes more than forty billions of dollars, and the report presented to you here will indicate the efforts of your committee to make known to department officials the sincere demand on the part of the committee for economy.

Mr. Chairman, in spite of the harmony which prevails in our committee, I feel there are a few items in this bill which could have been cut and which I feel I must oppose. One of them is the item for $140,000, which is to be used by our foreign missions for entertainment purposes. This item was raised from $125,000. So I reserve the right and serve notice on the House now that I opposed it in both subcommittee and full committee and shall offer an amendment in the House tomorrow to reduce it to its former figure. I would like to eliminate it entirely. To spend money on lavish entertainments in these days of want is unnecessary in my own opinion.

In reply to numerous inquiries from Members regarding the proposal to send farm bulletins and other publications to South and Central America, I wish to state that your committee disallowed this item. I understand that an attempt may be made to put this back into the bill. I hope that you will go along with this committee and keep it out. I feel that we should preserve the American market for the American farmer and stop subsidizing the foreign farmer. To send farm bulletins to Latin-American farmers is not only a waste of American taxpayers' money, but it is a crime against my own Nebraska farmers who are having a hard time to survive. I will not stand for putting foreign farmers into competition with them. Every member of my subcommittee feels as I do on this subject, and every Member representing a farm district should be on guard against anything that would defeat our efforts to preserve the American market for the American farmer.

There are a number of other items which I may discuss when we reach them after we start reading the bill tomorrow.

The Clerk read down to and including line 7 on page 1.

Mr. THOMAS S. MCMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6392, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a letter received by the chairman of the Committee on Labor from the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, National Cooperative Council, Agricultural Producers Labor Committee, and my reply to them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. HARRINGTON was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the remarks I made this afternoon, I ask unanimous consent to insert two news items and an article written by an inmate of the Shakopee Reformatory at Shakopee, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] may be permitted to address the House on Monday next, after the disposition of legislative business for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is entitled to be recognized at this time for 30 minutes. The Chair does not see the gentleman from Michigan.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FRIES. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend by own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article which appeared in the Bricklayers, Masons, and Plasterers' Magazine, in the April issue.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I made this afternoon certain data from the hearings.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS S. MCMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the appropriation bill today may be permitted to revise and extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. POLK, for 5 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARE, for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. MCARDLE, for the balance of the week, on account of illness.

To Mr. RAMSPECK, for tomorrow, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, May 19, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of Subcommittee No. 11 of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House in room 1310, New House Office Building, at 10 a. m. on Friday, May 19, 1939, for the consideration of S. 1796, to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.
